By Abigail L. Ho and Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

NO MORE hot baths in the morning for families who would now find cooking gas too expensive for heating water.

Edwin Sallan, a freelance journalist who has to help feed at least five mouths, says the high cost of liquefied petroleum gas (LPG) has led to the imposition of a "no hot bath" rule in their house at Better Living Subdivision in Parañaque City.

Since January, LPG prices have gone up eight times for a total of P6.85 per kilogram. The increases translate to a whopping P75.35 per 11-kg cylinder.

As of Aug. 23, an 11-kg cylinder of Shellane cost between P367.20 and P377.20; Caltex LPG, P385.90; TotalGaz, P352.20, and Petron Gasul, between P338.50 and P348.50.

Now the price of cooking gas is going up again, this time by a huge P1.50 per kg, or P16.50 per tank, because of high world crude prices. Members of the LPG Marketers Association, a group of LPG refiners, in fact already raised cooking gas prices by that amount yesterday.

To save on LPG, Sallan relates that his family also has resorted to heating leftover food in the microwave oven instead of on the gas stove, forgetting that electricity costs have also gone up and will continue to go up.

Malacañang is endorsing the National Power Corp.'s petition to increase its rates after admitting that President Macapagal-Arroyo's populist decision to defer the state-owned power generator's rate increase two years ago had contributed to the coun-

GMA takes time off for terra cotta warriors

By TJ Burgonio

BEIJING (via PLDT)—Taking time off from her hectic itinerary, President Macapagal-Arroyo yesterday made a brief tour of a museum housing the world-famous terra cotta warriors in Xi'an City.

The President, her husband Jose Miguel Arroyo and members of the official delegation rose early to take the special Philippine Airlines flight from Beijing to Xi'an at 7:45 a.m.

They were greeted by cold weather spawned by a slight drizzle when they disembarked at the international airport in Xi'an, which is an hour and a half away from the capital.

Escorted by Shaanxi Vice Gov. Zhu Jingzhi, Ms Arroyo walked through the museum housing three excavations of life-size terra cotta warriors and horses for some 20 minutes.

She looked pleased as she posed for her husband, a photography enthusiast, with rows of the clay figures standing in battle formation in the yawning pit as a backdrop.

She nodded as a Chinese wom-

House bill seeks to grant amnesty to tax cheats

ONE down, seven to go.

The House ways and means committee has unanimously agreed to approve next week a bill granting amnesty to erring taxpayers.

Malacañang had asked Congress to approve eight revenue measures aimed at raising a total of P80 billion for the cash-strapped government.

Data from the Bureau of Internal Revenue (BIR) showed that the government has receivables of at least P55 billion in unpaid taxes, according to Rep. Jesli Lapus (NPC, Tarlac), chair of the committee.

"Even if we collect only 10 percent, for example, depending on the final features of the bill, that's P5.5 billion," Lapus said in an interview.

Representatives Eric Singson (LR, Ilocos Sur) and Danilo Suarez (LR, Quezon) earlier filed their respective versions of a tax amnesty bill.

In a statement, Singson said the House committee on ways and means would approve next week a consolidated bill granting amnesty for all unpaid BIR taxes for 2003 and the years before.

Singson said the bill would raise P7 billion to P20 billion this year.

If approved by Congress, this would be the first legislated tax amnesty measure.

"Previous tax amnesty measures were implemented through presidential decree and executive order," Singson noted.

He noted that recent efforts at

Anwar cleared, freed from prison

PUTRAJAYA, Malaysia—Malaysia's highest court overturned the sodomy conviction of former Deputy Prime Minister Anwar Ibrahim on Thursday and freed him from prison—exactly six years after his removal from office had triggered the country's worst political crisis.

A panel of the Federal Court ruled 2-1 to reverse the conviction against Anwar.

He was expected to travel to Germany for surgery to treat a back injury stemming from a police beating in 1998.

Anwar was once considered the heir-apparent of his mentor-turned-nemesis, then-Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad. But Mahathir fired him, touching off widespread political turmoil.

Prime Minister Ahmad Abdullah

Badawi, who succeeded Anwar as Mahathir's handpicked heir, had been expected to take a softer line toward Anwar and put the divisive issue behind Malaysia after he took office last year.

In his first remarks to reporters, Anwar claimed that the convictions against him had been "highly politically motivated."

DOJ: Nida case evidence weak

By Philip C. Tubeza

JUSTICE Secretary Raul Gonzalez yesterday admitted the government's evidence in the Nida Blanca murder case was merely "circumstantial" and may not even "stand up in court."

Gonzalez said the government would have to present a stronger case if it was to again ask the United States to extradite Rod Lauren Strunk, Blanca's widower and the principal suspect in the killing.

He said Chief State Prosecutor Jovencito Zuño briefed him on the status of the case after he formally took over at the DOJ on Wednesday.

"Chief Zuño himself admits that all evidence available may not stand up in court. So the idea, he said, [is] to [send] the case [back] to the National Bureau of Investigation for further evidence-gathering," Gonzalez said.

The DOJ on Feb. 14, 2003, charged Strunk, Philip Medel Jr. and a Jane Doe with Blanca's murder before the Pasig City Regional Trial Court.

Gonzalez said the NBI would have to find "more substantial" evidence than was presented before the Pasig court if the DOJ were to ask the US again to extradite Strunk.

Basically circumstantial

But he said that while the evidence against the accused was "really basically circumstantial," it may still be enough to secure a conviction.

"I want to make this clear, circumstantial evidence can also convict," he said.

California Judge Gregory Hollows denied the government's first extradition petition in November 2003 due to the "conflicting and inconsistent evidence" that was submitted against Strunk.

Former acting Justice Secretary Ma. Mercedes Gutierrez last week said the DOJ had gathered new evidence in the case and that it would be enough to address the concerns raised by Hollows.

Gonzalez, however, said he had not seen any of the purported new evidence.

Won't get fair trial

"I do not know if the NBI has unearthed something new," he said.

Blanca was found stabbed to death in her car on Nov. 7, 2001. Strunk left the Philippines on Jan. 21, 2002 to visit his sick mother in California, promising to return.

Later, he changed his mind, saying he would not get a fair trial in the Philippines.

Get back at Americans

Gonzalez, meanwhile, said he told Zuño "to make it difficult" for the Americans to get back wanted persons from the Philippines.

"Confidentially, I told Chief Zuño to make it difficult for them because they are making it difficult for us to extradite (persons) we want," Gonzalez said.

Filipino seamen mutiny

By Martin P. Marfil

FILIPINO seamen went on strike yesterday and took over 10 fishing vessels off Papua New Guinea, according to sketchy reports reaching the Department of Labor and Employment.

About 150 crewmen on board 10 fishing vessels refused to work the boats that were in waters near the capital of Port Moresby, said labor assistant secretary Benedicto Bitonio Jr., the new DOLE spokesperson.

Bitonio said the crewmen took over command of the ships and demanded an increase in wages, improved working conditions and other benefits.

The ships all bore Philippine flags and were owned by RD Fishing, which is based in General Santos City.

"They were trying to claim international wages because they were fishing in international waters," Bitonio said, after checking with labor officials in General Santos City.

He said that according to government labor policy, crewmen's wages are based on the existing regional rates of the employer firm's place of business.

Bitonio said that Philippine Ambassador to Papua New Guinea Bienvenido Tejano was negotiating with the crewmen through the ship's communication facilities.

"He wants to know if they still want to work or if they are merely dramatizing their plight," the DOLE spokesperson said.

At the same time, DOLE officials have ordered the DOLE regional director in General Santos to investigate RD Fishing.

Erap case bellwether of corruption—Marcelo

By Dona Z. Pazzibugan

FRUSTRATED over the continued delay in the plunder and corruption trial of ousted President Joseph Estrada, Ombudsman Simeon Marcelo yesterday said that if Estrada should get away scot-free the country may as well give up its fight against corruption.

"We have to remember this case. If this battle is not won, the war against corruption will be forever lost," Marcelo said at a forum at the Ramon Magsaysay Center on Wednesday.

He was joined at the forum by another graft-buster, Haydee Yorac, the chair of the Presidential Commission on Good Government and this year's recipient of the Ramon Magsaysay Award for government service.

Marcelo said that Estrada has managed to delay presenting his defense for more than a year.

He noted that the prosecution rested its case way back in April 2003.

"Now we don't see any people rallying (because) the cases are taking too long. It's only the prosecutors who are complaining," Marcelo said.

Don't lose interest

He urged the Filipino public not to lose interest in the case against Estrada which he considers to be the banner case in the fight against corruption.

"There should be a closure," he said.

Estrada was ousted amid corruption and graft allegations during the second EDSA people power uprising of January 2001.

Marcelo said the first people power revolution that ousted the dictator Ferdinand Marcos did not have "closure" since not one of the Marcoses or their cronies and associates was jailed for corruption.

"If no one gets jailed this time, then we're lost," Marcelo said.

Marcelo was one of the private prosecutors at Estrada's impeachment trial that preceded his ouster.

Yorac, meanwhile, said she was staying put at the PCGG.

Private practice

Yorac, who has just returned from a month-long vacation and medical checkup in the United States, earlier said she wanted to return to private practice which she said was less stressful than government work.

The PCGG was apparently swayed by the appeals of coconut farmer groups which wanted her to continue to lead efforts to recover the coconut levy funds and other ill-gotten wealth of Marcos and his cronies.

"She has been asked by the coconut farmers to stay on. So she said yes," said PCGG Commissioner Vyva Aguirre.

Miraculous recovery

Yorac miraculously recovered from a stroke, a cancer operation, severe pneumonia and kidney malfunction last year.

She came home from the US last week in time to receive the prestigious Ramon Magsaysay Award for government service.

The awards foundation cited Yorac for keeping the public's confidence in government "through service of exceptional integrity and rigor and her unwavering pursuit of the rule of law."

The PCGG, meanwhile, is short of two commissioners.

Resignation

Commissioner Ruben Carranza, who was in charge of litigation, resigned on Aug. 11 to pursue graduate studies at New York University.

Last May, Commissioner Victoria Avena also resigned to return to the University of the Philippines College of Law faculty.

That left Yorac, Aguirre and William Dichoso in the PCGG.

Aguirre said Carranza opted to resign since he would be away for at least 10 months.

"He said if he did not go, he would lose the scholarship," Aguirre said.

Women's health bill on tap

By Blanche S. Rivera

THE DEPARTMENT of Health said it would draft its own version of the controversial reproductive health bill that failed to pass in the last Congress.

Health Secretary Manuel Dayrit said the DOH had a technical working group studying all the reproductive health bills that had been filed in the present Congress and would try to create its own version.

Dayrit met on Wednesday with House members at a forum sponsored by the Philippine Legislators Committee on Population and Development Foundation who are pushing for the passage of a law that would ensure medical care for mothers and children.

The PLCPD is one of the most vocal critics of the health secretary who has been criticized by population control advocates for saying that the health department was not mandated to control population growth.

"We have a group working on that already," Dayrit said when a House member suggested that the DOH come up with its own bill that could be presented to legislators.

"If it's necessary for the RH bill to come from the DOH, then let it be. Many legislators would gladly sponsor such a bill, since we're not arguing over substance, and many of the RH provisions would address the DOH's goals," said Rep. Darlene Antonino-Custodio.

She said that letting the health department come up with its own reproductive health proposal would ensure that the health secretary would be 100 percent behind the bill.

She said the DOH did not support the previous reproductive health bill.

Dayrit said it was because the language was "problematic." The Catholic Church had lobbied actively against previous House Bill 4110, saying that it condoned abortion.

Custodio said the bill only mandated the provision of medical care for women who had had abortions.

"The government is not supposed to castigate women who had abortions. Whatever happens, it is the doctor's job to save lives, whether it is a criminal's or a good person's," she said.

On Wednesday, Dayrit called for a top-level convention of the board of the Commission on Population (PopCom) to study the country's population growth.

Dayrit said he would get the secretaries of eight other government agencies, along with the UP Population Institute and three representatives of the private sector, to sit down and discuss the population agenda within the month.

In previous meetings, Cabinet members simply sent their representatives to tackle technical aspects of the country's population program.

"This time, we're getting all the secretaries to be part of the process of reviewing bills on population and reproductive health," Dayrit said at the same PLCPD forum.

This could be the first time since the Ramos administration that PopCom's top officials will be assembled for something other than its quarterly board meeting, said its executive director Tomas Osias.

PopCom, which used to be under the National Economic Development Authority, was tasked ensuring the consistency of population growth and distribution with the social and economic development of the country.

It was transferred to the Department of Health last year, although Dayrit said its mandate under Neda was not in any way different from its role under the DOH.

Dayrit said the government was fully behind efforts to reach the Millennium Development Goals, which includes reducing maternal and children mortality rates by 2015.

'Obet' clarifies P2-B Duty Free choco deal

By Armand N. Nocum

FORMER Tourism Secretary Roberto "Obet" Pagdanganan yesterday said that before he left the tourism department he had ordered a renegotiation of the P2-billion chocolate and snack concession contract at Duty Free Philippines.

Pagdanganan said that an Aug. 25 meeting of the Philippine Tourism Authority board, which he headed, had deferred ratification of the deal with Eastern Duty Free Management Services (EDF) after rival concessionaires submitted offers that would have given the government P180 million more in annual income.

He said the board passed two resolutions, one stating that the EDF deal was "not acceptable" and asking DFP general manager Michael Christian Kho to negotiate with EDF to match the price of the other concessionaires. If EDF agreed, then the contract would have been considered good as ratified, he said.

The second resolution said that if EDF did not agree to match the price, then the concession would be opened to others.

Pagdanganan defended the agreement that Kho had concluded with EDF on July 30, saying that it was the "best deal at that time" and that "the others were not good enough."

Pagdanganan, who is now chair and president of the state-owned Philippine International Trading Corp., was responding to reports about a graft complaint filed against him with the Ombudsman's office by the Duty Free Philippines Employees Association (DFPEA).

The DFPEA alleged that Pagdanganan had worked to ratify the five-year P2-billion deal with the British Virgin Islands-based EDF before leaving the DOT. It said the deal would result in a loss of P336 million a year for the government.

Kho yesterday said the July 30 agreement between him and the EDF was intended to give the government $7 million in "minimum annual guaranteed income."

Contrary to DFPEA allegations that the government would lose P336 million a year, or P1.6 billion in five years, Kho said the government even stood to earn more.

As to the union's claim that the DFP was giving away the chocolate concession—considered the cash cow of the EDF—at a time of financial crisis, Kho said the DFP would even be saving some money.

Kho said the deal would free up $8 million of borrowed money now tied up in chocolate inventories.

The deal provides that EDF "supply" the chocolate and confectioneries on consignment, credit or discount basis.

He said chocolate was a "difficult category to manage" because there is a bigger chance of "spoilage," the goods having a shelf life of only six months before they are considered expired.

He also downplayed union fears that the deal would result in a loss of jobs.

EDF managing director David Weil yesterday defended his firm's supply contract with the DFP as having gone through a rigorous process and full scrutiny, and approval of the PTA board, the DFP's supervisory body.

He said the "supply accord was done with faithful adherence to DFP's long-established protocols with regard to other similar arrangements stretching back to 1989."

Want to quit smoking? Here's how

By Blanche S. Rivera

ARE YOU desperately trying to quit smoking but can't?

Try cultivating the following "quitting habits" recommended by the Department of Health.

The first and crucial step, of course, is to decide to quit.

It may help your resolve if you knew that smoking is the leading cause of lung cancer in the country, according to HealthBeat, the official publication of the DOH.

Smoking causes small cell carcinoma, which accounts for 22 percent of all lung cancer cases in the country. Lung cancer kills 55 Filipinos every day and 20,000 Filipinos every year.

Nine out of 10 men who die from lung cancer are smokers. Cancer usually starts with a chronic cough, chest pains and shortness of breath. In later stages, the person suffers from loss of weight, fatigue, hoarseness, difficulty in swallowing and shortness of breath.

If your spirit is willing, but your body has other plans, here's what you should do:

- Quit gradually. Abstain from smoking for an entire hour and start lengthening that time by half-hours.
- Change to a brand of cigarettes you don't like. Smoking will have less appeal if you don't like the taste.
- Make it hard for yourself to smoke. Wrap the cigarette pack with elastic bands. Smoke with your left hand if you usually smoke with your right.
- If you drink coffee and smoke, switch to juice or iced tea. This could break the habit formed by association.
- Tell your friends you are quitting smoking. It helps to publicly denounce the habit so you would be more committed.
- If you smoke to relieve stress, then exercise. Experts agree that exercise is one of the best remedies for stress. When you exercise, you produce endorphins which naturally relieve pain and induce feelings of well-being and relaxation.
- Save the money you would have spent on cigarettes and treat yourself to something nice.
- It may take several attempts before you can completely kick the habit. The important thing is not to give up.

National Peace Consciousness Month 2004

UNITY: THE PATH TO PEACE

PAGKAKAISA: LANDAS TUNGO SA KAPAYAPAN

MESSAGE OF HER EXCELLENCY
PRESIDENT GLORIA MACAPAGAL-ARROYO

My vision of peace is based on our unity as a nation.

The unity we seek is not one of conformity but of unwavering respect for the institutions of democracy, a modern country founded on social justice and economic prosperity. Our nationhood is built on common values of: hard work, shared sacrifice, and love of country.

We need to face the deep divisions of our nation squarely, based on a search for truth and genuine solutions, engaging all segments of society behind a new government of political reform and change.

The government must take tough choices, but these, I have promised, will be tougher on those who have it easy than on those who have it tough already. In this way alone lies unity and not exploitation and division.

On the occasion of the Peace Month celebration, I would like to reiterate my call for all to come together and tear down the barriers of social division, build up economic opportunity for the poor, and establish justice for all. This is the foundation of our genuine unity; this is the foundation of our peace.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENTIAL ADVISER
ON THE PEACE PROCESS
SECRETARY TERESITA QUINTOS-DELES

We take the Peace Consciousness Month as an occasion to celebrate the possibilities of peace. We know how, daily, images of violence and division confront us. The Peace Consciousness Month is an occasion to acknowledge that, in this world, there is in fact another experience that could be the source of another light, another direction.

In our work at OPAPP, we find a wealth of images of people working across divides, across traditional fighting lines, and beyond war zones — men, women, children reaching to their counterparts on the other side in their search for ways to rebuild shattered lives, families, and dreams. We will endeavor, for the next 30 days, to increase public awareness of these equally real images of peace.

The Peace Consciousness Month is centered on the theme of unity to enable us to appreciate the reality of our diversity as a critical element in sustaining peace. A peace based on unity is one where our nation's various cultures are acknowledged and respected, one where the voices of those of our contested identities are enlarged and truly heard. For the Filipino nation, a peace based on a monolithic shade of gray will not hold. For the Filipino nation, only a rainbow kind of peace will endure.

I hope a lively interaction will ensue based on this theme. We shall warmly appreciate all efforts to make the Peace Consciousness Month a truly meaningful celebration.

THE DAILY GOSPEL

Friday, September 3, 2004
22nd Week in Ordinary Time

1st Reading: 1 Cor 4:1-5
Gospel: Lk 5:33-39
Some people asked Jesus, "The disciples of John fast often and say long prayers, and so do the disciples of the Pharisees. Why is it that your disciples eat and drink?" Then Jesus said to them, "You can't make wedding guests fast while the bridegroom is with them. But later the bridegroom will be taken from them and they will fast in those days."

Jesus also told them this parable, "No one tears a piece from a new coat to put it on an old one; otherwise the new will be torn and the piece taken from the new will not match the old. No one puts new wine into old wineskins; otherwise the new wine will burst the skins and be spilled, and the skins will be destroyed as well. But new wine must be put into fresh skins. Yet no one who has tasted old wine is eager to get new wine, but says: The old is good."

Commentary
"NEW wine must be put into fresh skins." In the Lord's time wine was not kept in bottles but in skins. When the new wine was placed in a skin, it continued to ferment, giving off carbon dioxide. An old skin had not the elasticity of a new one, and so it would burst and the wine was lost. This says to us: don't let your mind become like an old wine-skin. Our faith makes unconditional demands on us throughout our lives. It requires us to make immense leaps of sympathy and forgiveness; it asks us to live for God, not for earthly power and wealth; it asks us to put aside self-will and to live for others; it asks us to put to death our worldly pride and vanity, and to imitate the self-emptying (kenosis), the poverty of Christ; it asks us to lay down our very lives for our brothers and sisters; most challenging of all, it asks us to love our enemies. This was a new way to live, it was the new wine, requiring a new mind, new structures. The world, even at that time, was weary of the old ways of tyranny. It has even more reason to be tired of them now. That the Gospel still appears new and revolutionary is evidence that we haven't moved very far. The Gospel will always be News to us.

SUPREME COURT DOCTRINES

JUDICIAL ETHICS—Judge should be competent—Competence is the mark of a good judge. Having accepted the exalted position of a judge, whereby he judges his own fellowmen, the judge owes it to the public who depend on him, and to the dignity of the court he sits in, to be proficient in the law. We reiterate that judges are duty bound to be faithful to the law and to maintain professional competence at all times. Their role in the administration of justice requires a continuous study of the law, lest public confidence in the judiciary be eroded by incompetence and irresponsible conduct. Cops in austerity mode, too, vow to chip in P25M of his salary to help the government. But he'd like the whole force to do the same.

It's "a sacrifice" that should be considered "as soon as possible," Aglipay said yesterday as he asked all 115,000 police officers under his 11-day-old leadership to give up one day's wages in favor of their impoverished country.

"The idea didn't come from me," Aglipay told the INQUIRER, obviously wary of criticism. "Several policemen told me they wanted to [do it]." He said the goal was to raise P25 million, which would be donated to the National Treasury.

He had reason to be cautious. On Tuesday, he paraded like criminals before the media six cops he had personally caught napping while on duty. The repercussions were far from pleasant.

The cash donation that he is seeking a bigger sacrifice for policemen in the lower rungs than for their officials. An ordinary patrolman's (Police Officer 1) gross monthly income is P10,713. A single day's wage at this level is P392. In comparison, Aglipay, as director general (four-star), makes P42,180 gross monthly, or P1,400 daily.

If they failed to meet the target, the top cop said, he would shell out another day's salary. But he was pretty sure a single round would do it, even if only half of the force cooperated, since the PNP spent about P50 million for daily wages.

All the valiant donors had to do, he said, was sign a waiver.

Easy? Not for one patrolman on Edsa in Quezon City, who winced upon hearing the news. He had been working four more hours than usual, for a total of 12 a day, he said, to comply with Aglipay's program of increased police visibility.

"We did not complain," he told the INQUIRER on behalf of his comrades. "But we were hoping [the new leadership] could give us more benefits."

Higher-ups, too

They should be happy to know that the bosses have had to modify their lifestyles, too. For example, top police officials in Metro Manila are no longer allowed to play golf on weekdays. And their motorcycle escorts will be stopped. Meaning, for one thing, they will now suffer traffic jams like the rest of the populace.

These are among the many fresh directives from the new National Capital Region Police Office (NCR-PO) Director Avelino Razon. In a single day, Aug. 26, six such orders landed on the desks of city and town police chiefs.

Razon said motorcycle escorts for ranking officials depleted the already small number of patrol vehicles. So only the PNP chief would continue to enjoy the privilege, he said.

For the same reason, there will be no more NCRPO motorcycles used for escorts requested during weddings and funerals—which, Razon said, "smacks of moonlighting"—and no more "security service" for private individuals.

And cutting into patrol cops' personal austerity programs, Razon likewise banned "back riding" wives and girlfriends.

Senior Supt. Felipe Rojas Jr., Marikina police chief, welcomed the new directives, saying these should be the norm of conduct in the force. It's a "little overwhelming" at first, he said. "But as they say, if you can't take the heat, get out of the kitchen."

Four-day week

Keeping stride, the House of Representatives readopted a four-day, 10-hour work schedule called "compressed workweek" starting yesterday.

House Secretary General Roberto Nazareno said Speaker Jose de Venecia issued the memorandum enforcing the scheme, first adopted in the 12th Congress, under which House employees worked from 8 a.m. to 7 p.m., Monday to Thursday.

In his circular, De Venecia said the practice "tremendously reduced" costs on utilities and other expenses.

Noel Albano, deputy secretary general for public affairs, said the House saved P50 million in 2003. The amount was turned over to the National Treasury in January.

"Unless extremely necessary," Albano said, overtime work with pay would be discouraged. This excluded the staff of the committee on appropriations, he said, because of the marathon hearings on the proposed national budget for 2005.

And no more committee hearings would be allowed in hotels and other places outside the House building in Quezon City, Albano added, "except those requiring public consultation."

Despite financial constraints in his own department, Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez announced, also yesterday, that he would return at least P2 million to the National Treasury in support of the administration's austerity program.

"We have a very lean budget, but [on Wednesday] I found out that there was about P2 to 3 million left over from the DOJ's intelligence fund," Gonzalez explained. There was "no particular need" for the money at the moment, he said.

Mixed signals

There's been mixed signals from President Macapagal-Arroyo, who came under fire yesterday for bringing along relatives and her grandchildren's nannies on her visit to China—after ordering cuts on government spending.

Radio station dzBB poked fun at Ms Arroyo with an impromptu song asking Filipinos to save money while she took her daughters-in-law to China. The party left on Wednesday.

Top officials came to the President's rescue. Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita said the government shouldered only the expense for hotel rooms, plane tickets and allowances of Cabinet members, legislators, and the presidential security and communications staffs.

Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye defended First Gentleman Mike Arroyo's joining the state visit as "a matter of tradition." The couple's eldest son and Ms Arroyo's brother-in-law — both congressmen — were nominated by Speaker Jose de Venecia as part of the official delegation, Bunye added.

Bunye said the expenses of Arroyo's grandchildren and their nannies were funded privately.

In fact, Bunye said, the President's delegation had been "cut to the bare minimum," with only 16 people, including the first couple. But there are a total of 41 "support staff" from the Office of the President—security guards, press office staff and government broadcast stations covering the event, according to a Malacanang list.

Earlier this week, Ms Arroyo signed an order banning all foreign travel except for ministerial meetings and trips funded by grants. Unnecessary domestic trips, gifts and donations, and most celebrations and sports activities in government offices were also banned.

No sacred cows

Malacanang has already prohibited purchases of new government cars and launched an energy-saving campaign. There would be "no sacred cows" in the anti-corruption and austerity drives, the President vowed.

Yesterday, Bunye reiterated: "We have these two drives going together side by side and there will be no exceptions. The measures apply equally to all."

Meanwhile, the multimillion-peso makeover of a building inside the Palace premises continues.

"It is part of the Malacañang Museum," Bunye said of the ground floor of the Kalayaan Hall building. He did not disclose the amount allotted for the facelift, which has been going on since 2002, and is being overseen by Jeremy Barnes, presidential adviser on historical affairs.

But the funds will come from the National Historical Institute which has a budget of P92.662 million this year and P90.922 million last year. Barnes was unavailable for comment. With reports from Philip C. Tubeza and Agence France-Presse increasing the level of tax consciousness "seem not enough to encourage those in the underground economy to comply with present tax laws."

"This tax amnesty program will provide (those in the underground economy) with the opportunity to mend their ways and join the tax rolls without anxiety that their past activities will be subjected to audit and investigation," he said.

Explaining the proposed law in broad terms, Lapus said the amnesty would require the filing of statements of assets, liabilities and net worth (SALN) for taxable year 2003.

"The net worth will be the basis of computing how much taxes will go to the government," Lapus said.

The bill is not particularly geared toward a one-time payment but aims to expand the tax base, according to Lapus.

As Singson noted: "Long-term benefits will be equally realized by the prospects of improved tax collection from the expanded taxpayers' base."

Lapus said that business chambers had manifested their agreement to a tax amnesty program.

He said the proposed amnesty would also provide the basis for entering into compromise agreements with taxpayers charged by the government with tax evasion.

"In the past, there has been apprehension about entering into such compromise agreements in the absence of a law providing the basis for such agreements," Lapus said.

Anwar cleared, freed from prison

ed" but that he bore no ill will toward Mahathir, who retired 10 months ago.

"I bear no malice against him. Let him retire," Anwar said. "I feel vindicated. This is all about justice."

But the combative Mahathir was unrepentant, telling reporters that he was "mildly surprised" by the ruling. He rejected accusations that he had orchestrated a judicial conspiracy to frame Anwar.

"I'm not going to lose any sleep," the 78-year-old Mahathir said. "I still believe that he's guilty. My conscience is clear."

Judge Abdul Hamid Mohamad read out the verdict over 1 1/2 hours. As it became apparent that Anwar, 57, would be freed, the prisoner—wearing a neck brace and confined to a wheelchair—exchanged excited glances with family members and gave a thumbs-up sign.

Conviction flawed

"We are not prepared to uphold the conviction," Abdul Hamid said. "We therefore allow this appeal and set aside the conviction and the sentence."

Abdul Hamid said the conviction was flawed because the chief prosecution witness, Azizan Abubakar, had repeatedly changed the dates that he claimed Anwar had had sex with him. Azizan had been the driver for Anwar's wife.

Anwar credited Abdullah—despite being a longtime rival from their hometown of Penang—for not interfering with the judiciary.

"You've got to recognize the fact that his predecessor wouldn't have made this judgment possible," Anwar said.

Anwar said that he felt "tired" and would wait for doctors to examine him before deciding his next move, but vowed that he would keep struggling for democratic reforms.

Hundreds of supporters cheered and shook Anwar's hands as he was wheeled out of the courtroom. His vehicle was escorted by police and he was expected to briefly go to his father's home, then to his own house.

Anwar has long claimed that the convictions were rigged to prevent him from challenging Mahathir for power.

"Finally, the courts have found courage which they never had under the Mahathir regime," said observer Param Cumaraswamy, vice president of the Geneva-based International Commission of Jurists.

Anwar had been jailed since 1998 and had been expected to be in prison for another five years. A separate six-year corruption sentence ran out last year after it was reduced for good behavior.

Rumors of deal

The verdict followed rumors of behind-the-scenes dealings that Anwar would be freed in exchange for keeping a low profile and temporarily going to Germany, where he has begged to travel for surgery for years, claiming high-quality treatment was unavailable in Malaysia.

Family members and political colleagues said that Anwar would go to a hospital for provisional treatment and try to get a passport enabling him to fly to a clinic in Germany.

"We want to take him to Munich today," said Azizah Ismail, his wife, who called the verdict "a healing process for the nation."

Anwar would fly from Kuala Lumpur to Germany on a private jet provided by the Saudi Arabian government, said Ezam Mohamad Noor, a leader in the National Justice Party, founded after his arrest.

Anwar increasingly has been confined to a wheelchair from the injury, blamed partly on a beating inflicted by Malaysia's then-police chief while Anwar was chained to a cell bed after his arrest on Sept. 20, 1998, after leading a massive anti-Mahathir demonstration.

Despite the ruling, Anwar's future remains a pale shadow of the glittering career before him in the mid-1990s, when Mahathir rapidly promoted him through the Cabinet ranks and his charismatic, modern outlook made him the country's most popular politician.

Barred from office

Anwar will remain barred from seeking office for five years because of his conviction for corruption, which the courts have upheld in separate appeals proceedings. He will also likely remain an outcast from the United Malays National Organization, the ruling party now controlled by Abdullah.

The release of Anwar ends a long international embarrassment for Malaysia, when the United States and international human rights groups contended he was a political prisoner.

The US Embassy issued a statement welcoming his release and said it was "gratifying to see that justice has now been served. We hope that swift medical intervention will restore Anwar Ibrahim to good health."

Abdullah can now go to the ruling party conference later this month with his own moderate reputation enhanced and silence lingering uneasiness about Anwar's continued confinement.

Anwar and Mahathir had clashed over how to deal with the economic crisis that swept through Asia in 1997-98, but underlying it was a challenge Anwar was thought to be mounting to replace Mahathir, who had ruled since 1982.

Mahathir fired Anwar on Sept. 2, 1998. Anwar refused to go quietly and led tens of thousands of protesters demanding "Reformasi"—democratic reform and an end to corruption—that were the largest demonstrations orderly Malaysia had seen in decades.

Anwar was arrested, initially on national security grounds. He appeared in court Sept. 29, 1998, with a black eye and raising a clenched fist, a defiant image that blotted Mahathir's record as a statesman who transformed Malaysia into one of Asia's wealthiest countries.

Political prisoner

Anwar was charged with corruption and sodomy—a crime in mostly Muslim Malaysia—and convicted in separate trials widely seen as unfair. The United States and human rights groups labeled him a political prisoner.

Voters lashed out against Mahathir's government in 1999, giving an opposition that included an alliance of Islamic fundamentalists and the National Justice Party a record number of seats in Parliament.

But as the economy rebounded and the Sept. 11 terror attacks raised doubts in many minds about Anwar's own youthful past in Islamic politics, his cause faded as a public rallying point. Under Abdullah, the government obliterated the opposition in elections last March. AP had decided not to participate.

Judge drops rape case vs Bryant

But she isn't letting the NBA star off the hook just yet.

Bryant still faces her federal civil lawsuit seeking unspecified damages. That case is still on, said L. Lin Wood, the woman's attorney.

"There has been no settlement of the civil lawsuit and there have been no discussions concerning a settlement," he said.

Bryant tearfully admitted more than a year ago he had consensual sex with the then-19-year-old employee of a Vail-area resort where he stayed last summer. If convicted, the married father of a little girl could have faced four years to life in prison, and a fine up to $750,000.

A difficult case to prove

The last-minute dismissal of the case followed months of gaffes by courthouse staff that put his 20-year-old accuser in an uncomfortable spotlight. A determined, well-financed legal assault from the NBA star's defense team also helped stop the trial before it began.

Legal experts say the prosecution also had a very difficult case to prove—a he-said-she-said in which the accuser told investigators she willingly flirted with Bryant and engaged in consensual kissing.

Complicating the case was a defense expert who said DNA evidence showed the woman slept with someone else not long after leaving Bryant's hotel room.

"What seems very apparent is the prosecution made missteps early on," said Denver attorney Lisa Wayne, who has defended numerous sexual assault cases. "They never got to know this woman."

Woman's sex life

A key blow to the prosecution came last month when District Judge Terry Ruckriegle agreed that the woman's sex life in the three days before her hospital exam could be admitted as evidence at the trial, which may have bolstered the defense contention that she slept with someone after leaving Bryant and before she went to the exam.

The case also was marred by a series of mistakes, many of them by people whom the woman's attorneys said she trusted the most.

The accuser's name was included in filings mistakenly posted on a state court website and a court reporter accidentally e-mailed transcripts of a closed-door hearing on the woman's sexual activities to seven news organizations, which published the details after winning a First Amendment court fight with the judge.

Within those transcripts was a prelude of what would have come at trial: Testimony from a defense forensic expert who said she was convinced the accuser had sex with someone else soon after leaving Bryant—a claim that goes to the heart of the woman's credibility and her image as a traumatized victim.

Kobe apologizes

The woman's attorney, John Clune, said those mistakes were key to his client's decision to drop out of the case.

The accuser's decision to file a civil lawsuit against Bryant was another blow to the case, because it gave defense attorneys a chance to argue the woman had a financial motive to accuse Bryant of assault.

Bryant's defense team has long argued she falsely accused him to gain the attention of a former boyfriend, and that she was given nearly $20,000 from a victims' compensation fund.

The 26-year-old Los Angeles

Lakers guard issued a written apology that stopped short of taking responsibility for his actions.

"Although I truly believe this encounter between us was consensual, I recognize now that she did not and does not view this incident the same way I did," he said.

Sad day for justice

District Attorney Mark Hurlbert said he could have won the case, but he supported the woman's decision to withdraw, with a stipulation that charges will never be refiled.

"Today justice is sadly interrupted. The casualty in this interruption has been a brave young woman who was grievously hurt," Hurlbert said.

Victims' rights groups said the way the case disintegrated could force states to take another look at rape-shield laws, which typically bar the sex life of an alleged assault victim from being admitted as evidence.

Wendy Murphy, a professor at the New England School of Law in Boston and former prosecutor, said the case could shake many women's faith in the justice system.

"The rules, the laws, the things that are supposed to make us treat each other with civility are a big joke, it doesn't matter," she said.

Emotional scars

After mistakes that revealed her identity, at least two death threats and relentless media attention, Bryant's accuser apparently had had enough.

Neither Bryant nor his accuser were in the courtroom as the judge threw out the case.

Bryant said the civil case against him "will be decided by and between the parties directly involved in the incident and will no longer be a financial or emotional drain on the citizens of the state of Colorado."

"I also want to make it clear that I do not question the motives of this young woman," Bryant said. "No money has been paid to this woman. She has agreed that this statement will not be used against me in the civil case."

The civil lawsuit, like the criminal case, accuses Bryant of attacking the woman in his room at the Cordillera resort near Edwards, causing her emotional and physical problems that linger to this day.

Prosecutors said Bryant flirted with the woman, a front desk employee, during a tour of the resort. After the two ended up in his room, they began to kiss, which she acknowledged was consensual. Investigators have said the encounter turned violent and that she told Bryant "no" at least twice.

In the civil suit, the attorneys said at some point during the kissing "Bryant's voice became deeper and his acts became rougher" as he began to grope the woman. She asked him to stop, but Bryant allegedly blocked her exit, grabbed her and forced her over a chair to rape her. Bryant's hands were around the woman's neck, the attorneys said—"a perceived threat of potential strangulation if she resisted his advances."

District Attorney Hurlbert said he was confident that if a jury had been able to hear the alleged victim testify, Bryant would be convicted.

"The prosecution wants to try this case. I want to try this case," he said. "However, the victim has informed us after much of her own labored determination that she does not want to proceed. For this reason and this reason only I am dismissing the case."

Alleged hacker arrested

By Jerome Aning

IMMIGRATION agents have arrested an Indian woman alleged to be the leader of a syndicate responsible for hacking into the country's telecommunications system to make unauthorized telephone calls and for smuggling Indian nationals into the Philippines.

Immigration Commissioner Alipio Fernandez presented to reporters yesterday Pooja Khemlani who was arrested earlier this week at her residence in Paco, Manila, after weeks of surveillance.

Khemlani was alleged to be the financier of a gang that tapped into the telephone systems of some 369 institutions, including companies, nine government agencies and seven foreign embassies, to make unauthorized long-distance calls for which they charged a fee.

The activities of the gang had cost the Philippine Long Distance Telephone Co. some P197 million in lost revenues, according to the immigration bureau.

Khemlani eluded arrest earlier when a joint police and immigration team arrested two other Indians and a Bangladeshi in July in connection with the same case.

Fernandez said Khemlani was also the principal suspect in the illegal entry of 11 Indian nationals who were arrested by immigration officers in General Santos City in 2002.

Immigration agent Carlito Bautista, who led the arresting team, said Khemlani gained permanent Philippine residency in 1997 when she applied for amnesty under the Alien Social Integration Act.

He said Khemlani was arrested after her husband, also an Indian citizen, reported her activities to the bureau.

Fernandez said Khemlani was also being investigated for alleged dollar-salting, drug-trafficking and smuggling of medicines and jewelry.

SC junks raps vs CA justices

By Philip C. Tubeza

THE SUPREME Court has dismissed for "utter lack of merit" a complaint of corruption filed by a lawyer against three Court of Appeals justices.

In an eight-page decision, the high court's Second Division dismissed the complaint brought by lawyer Rex Fernandez against Associate Justices Eubolo G. Verzola, Martin S. Villarama Jr. and Mario L. Guarina III.

The tribunal said Fernandez failed to substantiate his allegations and did not even state the specific "acts and omissions" that the justices were supposed to have committed.

The Supreme Court warned that litigants who filed "clearly malicious and unfounded administrative" complaints could be ordered to explain why they should not be cited for contempt.

"It must be stressed that the court will not shirk from its responsibility of imposing discipline upon its employees, judges and associate justices alike; but neither will it hesitate to shield them from unfounded suits that serve to disrupt rather than promote the orderly administration of justice," said the decision penned by Justice Romeo Callejo Sr.

Fernandez had alleged that the three CA justices' decision of June 19, 2003, reversing National Electrification Administration chief Fr. Francisco Silva's order dismissing an Aklan electric cooperative official was "a fruit of corruption."

"The CA decision is patently and obviously a fruit of corruption without even considering the backdrop of the whole case but by mere perusal of the decision," Fernandez had said.

He asked the Supreme Court to set aside the CA ruling through a petition for certiorari but included in it his administrative complaint.

The high court, however, said that charges "based on mere suspicion and speculation" could not be given credence.

Talks fail to free hundreds of hostages in Russia school

BESLAN, Russia—Hundreds of mainly young hostages seized at a school close to Chechnya faced a second agonizing day in captivity Thursday after negotiations between the Russian authorities and their captors proved fruitless.

In three hours of phone negotiations, officials said they offered the hostage takers safe passage out of the region and also to exchange the trapped children—some as young as five—with adults. Both offers were turned down.

Russian snipers and tanks surrounded the building in the republic of North Ossetia while anxious relatives gathered nearby, many receiving help from psychiatric counselors and others crying over the lists of the children trapped inside.

Officials said the hostage-takers were still refusing to accept medicines and water for the hostages, some of whom suffer from diabetes. "The situation is quite critical," said Vyacheslav Karpinov, a doctor at the Beslan hospital.

Amid an atmosphere of national crisis, President Vladimir Putin, who has so far maintained a conspicuous silence over the drama, called off a visit to Turkey to confront the fourth act of terror here within a week.

There was conflicting information about the hostage-takers' demands, with some initial reports saying they sought the withdrawal of Russian troops from Chechnya.

Hundreds of relations of the children, teachers and parents taken hostage spent a sleepless night waiting for news in a public building just 150 meters away from the scene of the drama.

"If there were just adults inside then everyone would already be dead. But these are children and I hope that hope will not abandon them," said Georgy whose three nephews and a niece are trapped in the school.

While officials have not linked the hostage-takers to Chechen rebels, the event brought back nightmarish memories of the hostage-taking at a Moscow theater by the separatists in 2002, during which 130 spectators died after police used a poison gas when they stormed the building.

Messages of support poured in to Moscow, with US President George W. Bush saying that "we stand with the Russian people" and UN Secretary General Kofi Annan saying he was appalled by the attack.

On Russia's request, the UN Security Council condemned "the heinous act" in a unanimous vote late Wednesday in New York.

In a further sign of the violence in Chechnya itself, nine Russian servicemen were killed in roadside explosions in the republic, where rebels have been waging a decade of struggle against the authorities in Moscow.

At least 17 masked and heavily armed people burst into the courtyard of the school in the town of Beslan where students in their parade outfits and flowers and bells in hand were lining up for the traditionally festive first day in school on Wednesday.

Nine adults, including one hostage-taker, were killed and four injured as a result of the attack, news agencies reported, quoting law enforcement officials.

The father of a young girl was killed as he tried to run after and rescue his child. Other desperate parents were restrained by crack troops as they tried to do the same amid the gun battles.

The hostage-takers, who reportedly included two women wearing suicide belts, herded the children and adults into a gym in the school.

The New York Times reported it spoke to a rebel inside the school who said he represented the Second Group of Salakhin Riadus Shakhidi, a rebel contingent believed to be headed by Chechnya's most notorious rebel commander, Shamil Basayev.

All of the Russian papers were full of harrowing pictures of the incident.

The respected Izvestia daily changed its flag to all black over the stark headline, in boldface: "They have taken hundreds of our children." AFP

Bin Laden's wealth not funding terror attacks, probes reveal

WASHINGTON—Recent investigations into al-Qaida, including by the Sept. 11 commission, have substantially altered the commonly held view that Osama bin Laden's inheritance and massive fortune are being used to finance his international terror operations.

While Bin Laden isn't poor, he's not worth the $300 million once believed. Nor is he thought to be directly financing his terror group with his personal wealth or a network of businesses in Sudan, where he operated from 1991 to 1996.

"There has been a revision of collective thinking," said Kenneth Katzman, a Congressional Research Service expert who has studied terror groups. "The new thinking is that Bin Laden's fortune didn't really enter into al-Qaida that much, or wasn't the driving force in al-Qaida."

The report from the Sept. 11 commission concluded that al-Qaida has many financing avenues and could easily find new sources, particularly given the attack's price tag of just $400,000 to $500,000 over two years.

While the report said the government has been unable to determine the source of the attack's financing, the commission said it appears al-Qaida's financial support doesn't come from bin Laden personally.

"The CIA now estimates that it costs al-Qaida about $30 million per year to sustain its activities before 9/11 and that this money was raised almost entirely through donations," the report said.

The belief that Bin Laden was worth such staggering sums gathered steam shortly after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks when Katzman released a report—drawing on a 1996 state department fact sheet, he said recently—indicating that al-Qaida was tapping Bin Laden's $300 million personal fortune, along with other sources.

By February 2002, Katzman had updated the estimate, indicating that Bin Laden may be worth anywhere from $50 million to $300 million, but that the group had apparently become self-sustaining. The change got little notice. AP

Israel vows global hunt for Hamas leaders after Beersheba bombings

BEERSHEBA, Israel—Israel vowed a global pursuit of Hamas leaders and to forge ahead with its West Bank barrier Wednesday as funerals were held for victims of the deadliest Palestinian attack in nearly a year.

As soldiers demolished the family home of one of the two Hamas bombers, a senior government source said its battle against the Islamist group would not be constrained by geographical borders.

The source said Tuesday's bombings, which left 16 people and the two bombers dead in the southern desert city of Beersheba, bore the fingerprints of Hamas' Damascus-based leaders.

"There will be a continuation of our targeted operations against the heads of Hamas," the source said on condition of anonymity.

"There will be no geographical barrier in pursuing the terrorists and their leadership. Any place they are, there will be no immunity. It's Damascus that's calling the shots; the orders are coming from there."

Later, Israeli state radio also quoted Prime Minister Ariel Sharon and Defense Minister Shaul Mofaz as pointing the finger at Damascus.

The attacks in Beersheba were the deadliest since a suicide bombing in the port city of Haifa last October, which left 21 people and the female bomber dead.

Israel responded to that attack, carried out by the smaller Islamic Jihad organization, with an air strike on an alleged Palestinian militant training camp deep inside Syria.

Hamas has said the Beersheba bombings, carried out by two members from the southern West Bank city of Hebron, were in response to the assassination of two of its leaders earlier this year.

Since the death of Sheikh Ahmed Yassin and Abdelaziz Rantissi, both killed in Israeli air strikes in Gaza, Damascus-based politburo chief Khaled Meshaal has emerged as the undisputed leader.

Meshaal was the target of an failed assassination bid by Israeli agents in Jordan in 1997.

Addressing MPs, army chief of staff General Moshe Yaalon, pointed the finger of blame at the Palestinian Authority and the Lebanese militia Hezbollah as well as Damascus, vowing to "take care of those who support terror."

"That is those in the Palestinian Authority, the Hezbollah organization in Lebanon, in the terrorist command in Damascus, which operate with Syrian approval, and those who provide funding and weapons to terrorist organizations." AFP

Migrating ducks linked to bird flu in South Korea

SEOUL—A nine-month probe has linked migrating ducks to the deadly bird flu outbreak in South Korea earlier this year, researchers said Thursday.

The experts of the National Veterinary Quarantine Service said ducks and other migratory birds were the most likely source of the outbreak of the H5N1 strain of avian influenza among poultry in South Korea.

"By comparing with other likely sources such as imported poultry meat and travelers, we have identified migrating birds, mostly ducks, as the most likely source for bringing the virus to this country," said Wi Sung-Hwan, a senior researcher at the state agency.

The study showed the highly pathogenic virus first invaded ducks in the central city of Cheonan around last October. Unnoticed, the virus then spread to duck and chicken farms across the country, forcing quarantine authorities to cull five millions of ducks and chicken to contain the virus.

"You may be easily induced to suspect chickens as the source of the disease as chickens show symptoms swiftly, mostly within a period of between three and seven days after they attracted the virus," Wi said.

"But ducks have a strong resistance to the flu. Even after being infected with the virus, they just live on without showing any symptoms and their farmers can hardly notice the problem," he said.

The flu virus was first detected in the central province of North Chungcheong in December at a farm raising chicken and spread to the south-east and southeast of the country.

Quarantine authorities have analyzed all 19 poultry farms which were hit by the flu and confirmed that it was ducks that were first infected, he said.

The H5N1 strain is known to pass from infected poultry to humans. But there have been no reports of human infections in South Korea.

The bird flu claimed 19 lives in Vietnam and eight others in Thailand this year alone.

China, Thailand, Indonesia and Malaysia have also been hit by new outbreaks of bird flu over the past couple of months but only Vietnam has reported human infections. The last death in Thailand occurred on March 12. AFP

Cheney says Kerry unfit for White House

NEW YORK—US Vice President Dick Cheney led a blazing Republican attack on John Kerry on Wednesday, belittling the Democrat as weak, confused and unfit to replace George W. Bush in the White House.

In a sweeping speech playing on American fears of terrorism, Cheney said the United States was caught up in a worldwide war that it had to win, and one that Kerry did not have the mettle to fight.

He lambasted the Massachusetts senator for criticizing Bush's decision to go to war in Iraq without broad international support, and hammered away at Kerry as too fickle to stand up to critics at home and enemies abroad.

"His back-and-forth reflects a habit of indecision and sends a message of confusion," said the vice president, who was interrupted by frequent applause on the third night of the Republican national convention.

"Senator Kerry denounces American action when other countries don't approve, as if the whole object of our foreign policy were to please a few persistent critics," he said.

With the Nov. 2 vote less than nine weeks away and polls showing the two rivals neck-and-neck, Cheney said the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks had pushed the nation toward a "defining moment" that Kerry did not quite understand.

"Moments come along in history when leaders must make fundamental decisions about how to confront a long-term challenge abroad and how best to keep the American people secure," he said.

"He talks about leading a more sensitive war on terror, as though al-Qaida will be impressed with our softer side," said Cheney—one of the chief architects of Bush's strike-first policy that underpinned the Iraq war.

The tough talk signaled the gloves were off for the final phase of the campaign, with Bush showing new gains in the polls despite a struggling economy at home and ongoing violence in Iraq.

The Republicans have relied heavily on Sept. 11 in making their case for Bush's re-election, after opting to hold the convention in New York, just a few miles from where that day's attacks demolished the World Trade Center towers.

Bush arrived in New York late Wednesday to put the finishing touches on his own speech Thursday night, after which he will get back on the campaign trail.

"I'm going to lay out a vision tomorrow night for a safer world and a more hopeful America," he said earlier at a rally in Columbus, Ohio, one of several crucial battleground states on which the election could hinge.

On the domestic front, the White House promised weeks ago Bush would lay out details of his agenda for a second term, but that pledge has gone unfulfilled as he and the party have instead focussed on discrediting Kerry.

Convention speakers have repeatedly ridiculed Kerry, rated by a Washington magazine as the most liberal US senator, and on Wednesday the party pulled out an unusual weapon—one of Kerry's Democratic colleagues. AFP

Grief, protests in Nepal over hostage slays in Iraq

KATMANDU—Nepal observed a day of mourning Thursday for 12 workers murdered in Iraq as protests spread to the west of the Hindu kingdom following two deaths during riots in the capital.

Katmandu, which suffered tens of thousands of dollars in damage Wednesday when furious crowds torched offices of Arab airlines and businesses, was quiet Thursday with police given shoot-on-sight orders against rioters.

The city's main mosque, the Jama Masjid, was still smoldering as Muslims collected pieces of the Koran burned when protestors stormed the shrine and gutted it.

But protests spread to the western Nepalese city of Palpa, where police said they opened 12 rounds of blank fire to disperse a crowd of 3,000 people chanting slogans against Iraqi insurgents.

"At least two demonstrators were injured when police used a baton-charge to break up the crowd," a witness said. Police said they feared the protesters would vent their fury by attacking businesses.

Shops and schools were shut nationwide for the official mourning as the Himalayan kingdom's twin-triangle sun-and-moon flag was flown at half mast.

Nepal, which is not part of the US-led coalition in Iraq, is one of the world's poorest countries, fueling an exodus of tens of thousands of young people to low-level jobs abroad.

The 12 Nepalese, who were kidnapped 10 days before their executions were announced, had flown to Jordan in hopes of being cooks and cleaners.

The riots erupted hours after an Islamist website published grisly footage of a Nepalese man being beheaded and 11 others being shot in the biggest massacre of hostages in post-war Iraq.

Most airlines canceled flights to Katmandu after the curfew was imposed Wednesday. The government lifted the curfew for three and a half hours Thursday to allow the city's 1.5 million people to buy food and other essential goods.

"We are likely to extend the curfew to the weekend to avoid any clashes on Friday as it is the Muslims' day of prayer," a home ministry official said.

Two people were killed in Katmandu Wednesday, including a man who was shot dead by police as a crowd tried to storm the Egyptian Embassy, which represents Iraqi interests in Nepal.

The other man was shot dead as a surging crowd chanted slogans against Islamic extremists in Ratna Park, a sensitive area due to its proximity to King Gyanendra's Narayanhity Palace.

The king, who is revered as a god by Nepalese traditionalists, appealed late Wednesday for calm. "Let there be brotherly relations among different religions and cultures. We hope that civil society and political leaders will help maintain peace and security," said a statement in his name read over state radio.

All was quiet in the city with the largest Muslim community, Nepalgunj on the southwestern border with India. Some 300 Muslims staged a procession through the city late Wednesday to denounce the atrocity in Iraq, police said. AFP

Fate of journalist-hostages hangs

PARIS—French envoys were to hold crisis talks in Iraq and Jordan on Thursday in a desperate bid to free two journalists seized by militants seeking to overturn France's law banning Islamic head scarves in public schools.

A group of French Muslims was to arrive in the Iraqi capital of Baghdad to try to pursue negotiations with the shadowy militant group holding the journalists. Representatives of the French Council for the Muslim Faith, which serves as a link to President Jacques Chirac's government, left Paris on Wednesday in hopes of retrieving the journalists.

"I am against the presence of the Americans in Iraq, it is an occupying Army, but if an American journalist was captured, my message would be the same," said Abdallah Zekri, a member of the French Muslim council. "The role of journalists is democracy. They inform us, they inform the entire world. Journalism is a profession that must be respected."

The whereabouts of veteran Middle East correspondents Christian Chesnot and Georges Malbrunot remained unknown. A first deadline issued by militants for France to overturn its head scarf law passed Monday night without incident. A second deadline was issued Tuesday and extended until late Wednesday.

Chesnot, 37, of Radio France International, and Malbrunot, 41, reporting for the daily Le Figaro, were last heard from on Aug. 19 as they set off for the southern city of Najaf. Their Syrian chauffeur also vanished.

Jean de Belot, Figaro's managing editor, told Europe-1 radio on Thursday that French authorities believe the two hostages were still alive, according to information obtained from "indirect contact" with the kidnappers. AP

US to seek UN sanctions on Iran over nuke program

WASHINGTON—Secretary of State Colin Powell says the United States plans to press for a range of possible UN Security Council sanctions against Iran in response to what he describes as a concerted effort by that country to develop nuclear weapons.

Powell told reporters Wednesday night the United States will urge the United Nations' nuclear watchdog group on Sept. 13 in Vienna to refer the Iranian case to the UN Security Council for action.

"We're looking at the range of possible actions of a political, economic, diplomatic nature," Powell said.

He commented while flying home from Panama after attending the inauguration of Panamanian President Martin Torrijos.

In Vienna, the UN's International Atomic Energy Agency said earlier Wednesday that Iran plans to process tons of raw uranium and restart its centrifuges—two activities that could be used to make nuclear warheads.

US diplomats at the meeting said the revelations provided further evidence that Iran's activities pose "a threat to international peace and security."

"Unless there are assurances that the international community can count on, I think it's appropriate that it (the Iran issue) be referred to the Security Council," Powell said.

He said it remains to be seen whether there is a consensus to do that now.

Diplomats said the IAEA report on Iran with the new disclosures was based on information provided by Iran's government. Iran insists its nuclear program is devoted to the peaceful generation of electricity.

Earlier Wednesday, Undersecretary of State John R. Bolton, the administration's point man on nuclear proliferation threats, said, "We view with great concern" revelations in the IAEA report that Iran is about to convert 37 tons of yellow cake uranium into uranium hexafluoride gas.

Uranium hexafluoride is spun in centrifuges to produce enriched uranium, which in turn can be used to generate power or make nuclear warheads, depending on the degree of enrichment.

The United States will continue to urge other members of the UN agency's board of governors "to join with us in this effort to deal with the Iranian threat to international peace and security," Bolton said.

Another senior Bush administration official, in an interview in which his identity was withheld, said Iran was positioning itself to produce 100 kg of enriched uranium, enough for four nuclear weapons.

UN inspectors have been looking for evidence that Iran has a secret nuclear weapons program. Such a finding could be critical to the Bush administration's effort to gain support from the other 34 members of the agency to seek UN Security Council action.

Tom Casey, a state department spokesperson, said the report being circulated by the IAEA "continues to document the fact that through the past 18 years Iran has amassed a record of deception and denial about its nuclear activities."

Democratic presidential candidate John Kerry's campaign criticized the Bush administration for going to war against Iraq on what it called discredited grounds instead of acting sooner to marshal US allies to prevent Iran from developing nuclear weapons.

Iraq kidnappers free 7 truck drivers after getting ransom

KUWAIT CITY—The Kuwaiti employers of seven truck drivers freed Wednesday after being held hostage in Iraq said after the group arrived here that they had not ceased operations in Iraq and had paid more than half a million dollars as ransom to the kidnappers.

"We did not cease our operations in Iraq" as demanded by the kidnappers, Kuwait Gulf and Link (KGL) president Saeed Ismail al-Dashti told reporters after receiving the seven drivers at Kuwait airport.

"At present, the company transports to certain destinations inside Iraq, under heavy security protection, and Iraqi companies undertake internal distribution," he said.

KGL had announced Aug. 27 it had decided to stop working in Iraq in response to the kidnappers' demands.

Dashti said the company last paid half a million dollars to the abductors to secure the hostages' release, but other payments had been made before.

He declined to disclose the amounts of the previous payments.

Islamist militants released the three Indians, three Kenyans and Egyptian earlier Wednesday after holding them hostage for six weeks.

The seven drivers arrived aboard a chartered small passenger plane after a two-hour journey. They were welcomed by top officials and their countries' respective ambassadors.

They appeared in good health but looked exhausted. The three Indians and the Egyptian were immediately whisked out by embassy officials to awaiting cars without speaking to reporters.

One of the Kenyan drivers, Faiz Khamees, said the kidnappers "treated them well" except on the first day when they were mistreated. He declined to elaborate.

"After they caught us, they blindfolded us. They took us to a house and kept us blindfolded for most of the time in a single room," said Khamees, who and the other two Kenyans were helped by embassy officials to speak to their families back home.

Thai study: Drinking urine works wonders

BANGKOK—Drinking urine can eliminate sinus trouble, turn grey hair black and even cure cancer, a Thai academic said Thursday, citing a study of local Buddhists who engage in the unorthodox practice.

Ratree Cheepudomwit, of the Thai Traditional and Alternative Medicine Development Department, said hundreds of urine drinkers attested that consuming a daily cup worked wonders for their overall health and helped slow the aging process.

She said that in June she queried 250 members of Santi Asoke, a strict indigenous Buddhist movement believed to have thousands of followers, and 204 respondents said they had learned from ancient Buddhist manuscripts that drinking one's urine improved health.

"Of the respondents, 87 percent confirmed that it had head-to-toe benefits for them, including for example reduction of dandruff, grey hair, sinus problems and cancer," Ratree said.

The medical elixir was not easy on everyone's system, as about one in 10 urine drinkers suffered diarrhea afterwards, but the practice should not be viewed with disgust, she said.

"Other groups of people who drank urine were Buddhist monks who practiced in accordance to scriptures which are more than 2,500 years old," she said.

Honor thy enemy

THE ABSENCE of President Macapagal-Arroyo from this year's Ramon Magsaysay Awards ceremonies shows the challenges that the awards foundation and Manila face in organizing and hosting Asia's most prestigious prize-giving ritual. Historically, it is the President of the Republic who presides over the awards ceremonies. But this year, Ms Macapagal was noticeably absent. On the eve of her state visit to China, she did not go to the ceremonies apparently so as not to further provoke Beijing, which barred the Chinese winner for public service, Dr. Jiang Yanyong, from leaving China for Manila to receive the award.

What was Jiang's sin? He was the retired military physician who, despite Beijing's news blackout and media manipulation, revealed to the world the epidemic of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) sweeping China. On April 3, 2003, China's health minister grossly understated the SARS figures in a report. Jiang, who had gotten first-hand information about the epidemic's deadly spread from Guangdong province to Hong Kong, then issued a letter to the press, challenging the report and giving his own version of the situation. Only then did Beijing, which had previously ordered hospital officials not to speak about the epidemic lest it disturb important national meetings in the capital, fire the health minister and order a public health campaign. The outbreak was stemmed two months later.

Jiang is not a maverick or a dissident. He's in fact a loyal member of the Communist Party who, like many intellectuals and professionals, suffered persecution during the Hundred Flowers campaign, the Cultural Revolution, and other purges that are usually carried out by utopian socialist lunatics at the cost of so much lives and reputations. Since Jiang has kept faith with communism and its reputed ability to correct its mistakes and renew itself, he represents perhaps the best hope of communism. But of course, the fact that he continues to be persecuted despite saving China from SARS—and from its harebrained party bosses—should provide caution against hoping too much in communist hope.

Of course, the Chinese authorities may consider the award as a capitalist agitprop to discredit communism since, they may allege, the Ramon Magsaysay Awards Foundation is American-endowed and, therefore, "CIA-funded." But the award really recognizes portraits of courage amid so much adversity and struggles across the world, across races, ideologies and regimes.

By speaking out on the real SARS situation in China, Jiang was like Dr. Thomas Stockmann in Henrik Ibsen's "Enemy of the People," the public-minded doctor in a small town in Norway famous for its public baths who discovers that the water is contaminated and has probably been the cause of some illness among the tourists who are the town's economic lifeblood. When he presents his findings to the town leaders, he runs into the establishment that refuses to close down the baths and contain the epidemic. He is publicly labeled an enemy of the people.

Come to think of it, the other Magsaysay winners are enemies of the people for taking on thankless advocacies that rile the establishment. Our very own Haydee Yorac (honoree for government service) has become the enemy of corrupters for reforming the Presidential Commission on Good Government that is running after the Marcoses, their close associates and other plunderers. By teaching farmers self-reliance, Prayong Ronnarong of Thailand (community leadership) is the enemy of Thai politicians and businessmen who seek to hold the peasants in their thrall. By promoting literacy and love of the great books of humanity, Abdullah Aby Sayeed of Bangladesh (journalism, literature and creative communication arts) is the enemy of illiteracy and poverty. By fostering dialogue, Laxminarayan Ramdas of India and Ibn Abdur Rehman of Pakistan (peace and international understanding) is the enemy of jingoists and warmongers who seek to exploit age-old animosities and plunge India and Pakistan into nuclear madness. And by working for the displaced lumad of Mindanao and building peace zones in a land of conflict, Benjamin Abadiano (emergent leadership) is the enemy of those seeking to destroy the peace and put the indigenous people in the crossfire of hate and death.

In the final analysis, the Magsaysay awardees are enemies of despair. They represent the legacy of President Ramon Magsaysay: "greatness of spirit in selfless service to the people."

Abolish the pork barrel completely

REALIZING that the anger of taxpayers is about to explode like a volcano, various groups who should be paying more in taxes but don't are scrambling all over each other in suggesting ways for the government to get more money to be able to pay its deficit. The suggestions are varied but have one thing in common: all of them carefully avoided suggesting that they forego their privileges and perks.

Speaker Jose de Venecia proposed that the rich donate P1 million each and their wives their jewels to the government. "Ano kayo, sinusuwerte?" snorted a businessman. "Donate, what for? So they can steal it?"

Really ridiculous. Why doesn't the Speaker simply give up his discretionary fund? That's P1 billion saved right there.

A couple of very rich businessmen have readily expressed willingness to donate P1 million each to the government. That's because that is cheaper for them than to pay the correct taxes. They hope that by doing that, they will prevent Congress from removing the 30 percent cap on income tax rates. The original cap was 70 percent, but because of the lobbying of the mega-rich, Congress lowered it to 30 percent. Even if a person is earning billions every year, he pays only a maximum 30 percent, the same as the members of the middle class.

Besides, those P1 million donations are tax deductible anyway. So the rich don't really give up anything.

My own suggestion is for the rich to hold on to their donations but for Congress to restore the maximum income tax rate to the original 70 percent.

While most of the congressmen cling to their pork barrel, all of them agreed to cut their pork by 38 percent. Big deal! They don't deserve even a peso of the pork. All of it should be abolished. It not only wastes taxpayers money, it is the biggest form of corruption.

"Bawasan ang pork barrel o tuluyan nang tanggalin?" the INQUIRER asks its readers to vote in its text poll. I am sure the people will vote overwhelmingly to totally abolish the pork. (Anyway, the pork is infected with lightfinger-and-mouth disease.) A similar television poll also showed the same sentiment of the people.

AS I SEE IT

A small group of congressmen proposed giving up one month's salary instead of reducing their pork. Big deal again! A congressman's monthly salary is only P35,000 but his allowances are many times that and his pork barrel is P65 million! A committee chair's allowance alone is from P100,000 to P200,000 each, although none of them will admit it. That is why the legislators are fighting over the committee chairmanships.

In spite of the huge incomes that legislators rake in, they pay only peanuts in income taxes. (Some journalists pay more than them.) While legislators and Cabinet members list huge assets in their statements of assets and liabilities, competing with one another as to who is the richest, they pay very little in income taxes. So it would be very enlightening to publish beside their statements of assets and liabilities the income tax returns of the members of Congress and the Cabinet.

The Catholic Bishops' Conference of the Philippines has urged the priests to donate cash to the government. Why don't the schools run by religious organizations just pay taxes instead? Although these schools like Ateneo and La Salle are earning billions of pesos, they don't pay a single peso in income taxes. They hide behind the "separation of Church and State" provision of the Constitution. But the Constitution never said they are tax exempt.

What the Constitution means by "separation of Church and State" is that the Church, because of the meddling of the friars in the affairs of the government during the Spanish regime, should not interfere with the State and vice versa.

The ordeal known as the bar exams

PASSION FOR REASON

Raul C. Pangalangan

ty.' will be on my tombstone."

The obsession with the bar exams is so intense that it has led to organized attempts at cheating, the most recent being the massive leakage last year of almost the entire examination in Commercial Law, which was downloaded from the bar examiner's office computer by a junior lawyer, an FEU law alumnus who no sooner shared it with his fraternity brothers, including those in MLQU. The Supreme Court disbarred him and nullified that exam. The Court has also dealt harshly with the 2001 failure of the bar exam committee chair to disclose that a nephew was taking the exam (which led to sanctions against the chair) and the 1982 premature decoding of the grades of a Supreme Court justice's son (which led to the resignation of all the justices, and the non-renewal of the appointment of the two justices who had been implicated).

That is why the entire bar examination system is anchored on secrecy. The Supreme Court designates one of its own to chair the bar exam committee, who then chooses an examiner for each of the eight subjects of the exam. The examiner drafts the questions and grades the answers. He is asked to adopt an alias known only to the chair, and to tell no one that he is an examiner. His identity is disclosed only after the results are published. The next year, an altogether new chair and committee of examiners take over.

This system has been in place for more than a century, with periodic fine-tuning here and there. But are the bar exams a reliable test of competence in law? Justice Irene Cortes had sa, not any tax exemption. But our experience shows that members of the clergy keep interfering anyway, so that gives the State justification to pay the Church back in kind by taxing it.

Every week, religious organizations like El Shaddai and Jesus is Lord collect millions of pesos from their gullible followers whom they have made to believe that the path to Heaven is littered with donations to their high priests. All those millions are tax-free. Where is the principle that those who have more money should pay more taxes?

Besides, if the Church should be given any tax exemption, it should be for the operation of the churches themselves. Universities are business enterprises and should be treated as such. Many of the secular priests, especially those in the rural areas, survive on the contributions of their parishioners. But the foreign-born priests of the religious orders running the universities live like kings but don't pay any taxes at all.

President Macapagal-Arroyo has ordered austerity measures for the government, such as no overtime, no seminars, no purchase of new vehicles, etc. These are all for show and affect mostly the rank and file, not the high-salaried and high-allowanced officials. To show sincerity, why doesn't she give up her P1 billion discretionary allowance? Anyway, Pagcor gives to her social fund millions of pesos every month, which is not included in the budget.

All the Cabinet members have huge intelligence funds that are not audited by the Commission on Audit. There are so many other allowances that, put together, add up to billions of pesos. If the President will just deduct from her proposed budget 20 percent of all allowances across the board, she probably won't have any deficit.

And why is it necessary for members of Congress to agree to give up their pork? If the President will not include any Priority Development Assistance Fund in the budget, there would be no pork and the congressmen cannot do anything about it. They cannot add it. They can only reduce the proposed budget but cannot increase it.

long lamented that bar exam questions tended toward rote memory and the mechanical application of rules in what American law schools call "short-answer questions." The questions sometimes focus unduly on just a few aspects of a subject, and are not evenly distributed to test the candidate's mastery of that field of law. The level of difficulty fluctuates and so does the strictness in grading, which can be so subjective and inconsistent.

The bench and academia have issued endless admonitions to reform the substance of the exams, but it was only recently that the focus shifted to the true culprit: the sociology of how the bar exams are made and how the answers are weighed. Given that the bar exams are made and marked by the solitary, ad hoc examiner, there is no mechanism for building upon past lessons and experiences, for improving the way test problems are designed and exam booklets are checked—a surefire way to be unscientific.

The Court has now adopted radical reform proposals based on a paper by recently retired Justice Vicente V. Mendoza. In order to improve the quality of the questions, we must overhaul the way the exams are organized. The Court plans within two to five years to do away with this ad hoc system by appointing a tenured Board of Examiners, so that the bar questions are not done by one examiner working in secrecy and isolation, and panels of "readers" who will grade the answers and who will design a "calibration method" to ensure that grading standards are uniformly applied.

These reforms, adopted only on July 15, 2004, will not yet be in place for the bar candidates this Sunday. It falls upon the present chair, Justice Leonardo A. Quisumbing, and his team of examiners to pick the fittest and to choose fairly and well. To our gladiators at the Taft Avenue colosseum, remember the call: "Strength and honor. At the signal, unleash hell. What we do in life echoes in eternity."

Fallacies of quick-fix solutions to 'crisis'

IN THEIR paper, "The Deepening Crisis: The Real Score on Deficits and the Public Debt," the 11 UP School of Economics academics warn that the country faces economic collapse in two years unless the government takes immediate steps to curb the widening public sector deficit and debt.

The paper was not just a "wake-up call" as some would lightly dismiss it. It was intended to shock the political leadership—notably the executive and the legislature—into action and make the public and the business community aware that the "looming threat represented by an uncontrolled public debt is indeed the biggest economic challenge the country will have to confront immediately."

The economists were impelled to issue the paper after public debate over the deficit had given them "ample reason to doubt" whether the political elite and the public truly understood the message of President Macapagal-Arroyo in her State of the Nation Address that the deficit was "our most urgent problem." The UP economists said that "the quality of public debate on the issue stirs grave doubts whether the scale and consequences of 'our most urgent problem' are indeed being fully appreciated."

Their doubts were, indeed, confirmed quickly by the quality of debate that followed the publication of the paper. From the immediate reactions, the paper did not achieve the shock effect that was intended. The UP economists feared that because the issue was "removed from the people's daily experience," the issue was reduced to a banal exercise which produced "clever" solutions which give "false assurance that a crisis can be staved off with no sacrifice or pain, and no radical readjustments in people's way of life."

More than a week after the issuance of the report, the quality of the debate has confirmed their worst fears. The purpose of this comment is to call attention to the fact that the political elite has not realized the urgency of addressing the recommendations put forward by the UP economists to avert an economic crash of the severity experienced by Argentina in 2002, when it defaulted on its $88 billion debt.

Where did the debate go after the publication of the paper? The first area in which it bogged down was the issue of whether we are in the midst of a "fiscal crisis" or a "full-blown economic crisis"—or whether we are not yet there or already there. The debate centered on definitions of "crisis" in which dictionary meanings were cited without in any way clarifying how deep in trouble we are.

The text of the economists' paper conveys the severity of the debt and deficit issue and what the economic and political ramifications are. It does not only trace the roots of the problem but also puts forwards concrete proposals that the government can take to avert an Argentina-type economic disaster. The following definition by the paper captures the essence and the urgency of the problem and does not need further resort to hair-splitting semantics: "While the economy is not yet on the brink at this time, it can probably afford at most three years to avert such a crisis—with possibly a year at most to convince financial markets it is doing something to reverse the situation." This assessment emphasizes immediate action based on a package of recommended actions.

The immediate response from the political elite involves two themes: the first is that the political sector has channeled the issue to a diversionary exercise: declaring austerity in government or cost cutting; the second theme is where the cost cutting should be made—the congressional pork barrel or the executive's discretionary funds. The question here is who takes the pain of cost cutting. The emergence of these issues amounts to dodging the problem and finger-pointing, precisely a situation that the academics said should not happen.

The issues between the executive and the legislative departments boil down to two things: first, whether the President should be granted emergency powers to implement extraordinary measures aimed at curbing the deficit and public debt; second, the urgent need to pass new tax measures to enhance revenue. The second issue has come down to a flea market transaction in which, it is proposed, that members of Congress either give up their pork barrel allocation completely or merely half of it. It has also become a matter of swapping new taxes for pork barrel. In regard to emergency powers, the martial law syndrome has intruded. Some senators, sensitive to martial law memories, have warned that emergency powers are likely to be abused.

The paper says it is important to dispose of "schemes that tend merely to raise unrealistic hopes and distraction from serious solutions."

One such scheme is the idea that "the economy can somehow 'grow' itself out of a crisis-trajectory while keeping inflation and currency depreciation at levels no worse than today's." This solution "is no more than whistling in the dark," the paper says.

The paper shoots down the quick-fix idea that the government should simply "live within its means" by cutting down waste. It notes a proposal to limit the increase in the government budget to no more than 5 percent a year in absolute terms. It points out that the apparent rationality of this idea evaporates once it is realized that inflation hovers at 4 to 5 percent per annum, which means spending would be frozen in real terms.

The paper blasts the "fallacy" dearly held by members of Congress that "no new taxes are needed" and "all that is required is sound enforcement and tax administration" and if you "get rid of corruption, you get rid of the deficit problem."

'Po'

"HELLO, may I speak to Mr. Arroyo please?" Silence.

"Hello? Hello?" You're wondering what's happened and might even put down the phone, thinking you've been disconnected. If you're patient enough though, you'll eventually hear sounds in the background and Mr. Arroyo's footsteps as he approaches the phone and finally answers.

What I just described actually happens all the time in the Philippines. In Tagalog, we describe the silence as "ni ho ni ha," neither a "ho" nor a "ha" as the person who answered the phone goes off to get the person you're looking for, without a "Just a minute please" or the (incorrect) "For a while sir."

Until recently, I'd get quite upset whenever I got that "silent treatment," seeing it as rudeness on the part of the person who answered. The final straw came when I got that treatment from operators at a five-star hotel in Manila. I complained to management. They were shocked this was happening and ordered a retraining of their operators.

Yet, it took my Canadian brother-in-law, who was the person I was trying to contact at the hotel, to "defend" the operators. He said he'd seen the same behavior among the Inuit (Eskimos) in Canada. An Inuit food server, for example, will take your order and then just walk away in silence, coming back after some time with the food. That behavior might again be interpreted as rude, or leave you wondering if you did something wrong and had offended the waiter.

Sounds of silence

There are vast differences in etiquette across cultures, including the way we express politeness in language. These differences can create problems, especially as we become more globalized and have to deal directly with people of different cultures. Imagine a large firm in Europe calling your office and getting the silent treatment from your operators; you could actually lose business because the callers—Westerners or Filipinos like myself—might interpret the operators' "ni ho ni ha" as a lack, not just of etiquette, but of professionalism on the part of the entire company.

Silence has different meanings in different cultures. Filipinos lapse into silence when we're in a tense or uncertain situation. When there are conflicts in the office for example, the Western response is to call for a "dialogue," which can turn out to be a fiery match, with protagonists shouting at each other and then shaking hands at the end. In a Filipino setting, bringing protagonists together will only mean cold stony silence. A good manager has to understand the silence does not mean an inability to dialogue but is actually an act of politeness. The silence means both sides are too hurt, too angry, to communicate and they know this. They are unwilling to start a conversation that will only end up in "kabastusan," being rude to each other. The silence is a polite way of asking for more time.

In other instances, the silence may mean "Let's not discuss this anymore. Let's not have a Tupperware party." Tupperware? That's slang for saying "The other side is totally insincere so let's not try to be plastic, like Tupperware." That's a form of etiquette, too, not wanting to waste the precious time of the office.

Women are particularly effective with this silence, knowing that sometimes that silence can be a sign of strength, especially when jousting with men. On the surface, the silence may seem like acquiescence, but eventually the male realizes he has lost the battle, that the woman's silence means, "I will not stoop to your level and get insulted by more of your lies. I forgive you, but I will never, never forget."

Melodrama as etiquette

Paradoxically, we also swing to the other extreme of saying too much when we try to be polite. It was UP Prof. Jeena Rani Marquez who first alerted me to this phenomenon in a paper she presented in a conference two or three years ago. She introduced her paper by reading a letter from a student who wanted to return to the university after having taken a leave of absence for three semesters.

The letter had 154 words, with the student going into a long explanation of her leave, how she got pregnant, how she had a "wonderful baby boy," how she thought of returning to school but how financial difficulties prevented her from doing so and how they couldn't afford to get a yaya (nanny) for her son and nephew ("both are babies," she qualifies).

Marquez's point was that the long narrative was unnecessary and could have even become counter-productive, with a university official negatively reacting to all the melodrama. On the other hand, the letter is "correct" in terms of Filipino etiquette because it invokes our value of pakiramdam, "feeling the other person's feelings." To get to the point, seen as a virtue in the West, may seem rude so we tend to bring in some kind of introduction to conversations, letters, even casual encounters. That includes the rude (by Western standards), "Uy, you've put on weight" to people already in despair with their being overweight and "Uy, you're losing so much weight" to people already feeling emaciated.

Returning to the student, note that if her letter had been in Filipino, it would probably have elicited less negative reactions. The use of English sets the tone for the exchange: when we speak or write in English, we're expected to take on "American" or "Western" values, including being direct, with verbosity then becoming an affront ("What a waste of my time" or "Who's she trying to fool?").

Translating 'po'

Still another paradox: the student's letter might actually have been shorter if she had written it in Filipino. Marquez points out that Filipinos sometimes become more verbose when making a request in English because we suddenly find ourselves at a loss when we cannot use "po" from Tagalog and some Philippine languages.

"Po" is a powerful magical word that dispenses with the need to go into lengthy introductions. "Pahingi" (Give me) sounds almost aggressive but "pahingi po" is polite, even endearing. Yet "po" defies translation, which explains another dilemma in our now bilingual society: when we write in English, the absence of a "po" makes the letter-writing difficult. Note the difference between, "I would like to return to study this semester," which can sound almost demanding and which would therefore have required long rationalizations, and "Nais ko pong bumalik sa pag-aaral ngayong semester."

Different languages employ different "devices" for etiquette. Besides the "po" in Tagalog we have "paki," somewhat like the English "please." Cebuano does not have "po," which can create problems when a Cebuano talks with Tagalogs. The Cebuanos do have "palihug," similar to the English "please" and Tagalog "paki" but also incorporating a sense of "only if you want to."

Learning to "switch" around the codes of etiquette in different languages can be daunting, but it is essential, palihug lang po please, we pick up this skill if we are to survive in our multicultural age.

Tale of two gatherings

AT LARGE

Rina Jimenez-David

"CERTAINLY, the potential of expanding the cutbacks and of maintaining a policy hostile to women is there," in the event of a Bush reelection, Frances Kissling of Catholics for a Free Choice and one of the organizers of the Roundtable acknowledged.

Steve Sinding, director general of the International Planned Parenthood Federation, one of the organizers of this global NGO meet, admitted that IPPF lost approximately 20 percent of its funding as a consequence of the "Global Gag Rule." The IPPF is composed of family planning associations and clinics around the world, including the Philippines.

"Some of our affiliates were forced to close down clinics," Sinding said, noting that the resulting reduction in services led to "thousands, if not hundreds of thousands of unintended pregnancies, many of which resulted in unsafe abortions." Indeed, said Sinding, the biggest impact of the loss of funding to service providers worldwide has been "a dramatic increase in the number of abortions."

BUT turning off the source of funding was not the only means by which the Bush administration sought to turn back the progress made since Cairo.

From the very first regional reviews of how governments have implemented the ICPD Program of Action, the United States has fielded delegations that aggressively pursued their agenda of getting the rest of the world to "repudiate" key portions of the Cairo document. Their brash negotiating tactics were accompanied by threats of aid funding cutbacks and even of "reporting" recalcitrant delegations to their local American ambassador.

The good news is that in each and every regional assessment meeting, the United States ended up isolated as the majority of the world's governments, some of which had even abstained from signing the final Cairo agreement, stood firmly by the consensus reached in 1994 and refused to turn back the hands of time.

Still, so powerful and influential is the United States and its allies, like the Vatican, that they have prevented the United Nations from holding a formal global review of the past 10 years since the ICPD. Instead, there will only be a ceremonial observance of the ICPD 10th anniversary during the UN General Session a few months hence. This for fear that by convening an international conference, the UN would be opening the doors to a "Trojan horse" delegation insisting on revisiting and repudiating the Cairo consensus.

AND so, despite the fact that the cheering audiences in Madison Square Garden largely ignored the events in London, this Roundtable has become the only truly global event celebrating and assessing the past decade since the ICPD.

"The world has changed dramatically since 1994," Kissling said in a press conference a day before the Roundtable's opening. Among the changes that have taken place: the rise of conservatism and the growing power of conservative and fundamentalist forces, continued armed conflicts and wars, the further spread of the HIV/AIDS pandemic, new communication technologies that have speeded up the exchange of information, and new reproductive health technologies, including the bio-tech revolution.

Most everybody here agrees that the paradigm shift signaled by the Cairo Conference is still very valid and responsive to the sexual and reproductive health and rights needs of people across the globe. The challenge that faces the men, women and youth gathered here is how to adapt the gains made at Cairo to present realities, or as Lieve Franssen of the European Commission said at the opening plenary, "How to translate the agenda into new forms."

A glimpse of mid-19th century economic life

WHEN curious people ask why I went into history as a profession, I usually reply that I am bad with numbers. Apparently I use the side of the brain that has something to do with texts and pictures. In college, I chose a course that required the fewest math and science subjects. Perhaps this attitude was a reflection of my aptitude, my preferences, or the way I was taught in grade school and high school, though we will never know.

But then even as a historian, one cannot escape math and numbers because current bad news is filled with terms like "fiscal crisis," "budget deficit," "GDP," "GNP" and many others that make me wish I paid more attention to the college economics course that included the compulsory items on land reform and taxation. Maybe it is the present economic problem that prodded me to read the stale economic data gathered by Pierre Joseph Lannoy, the Belgian consul in Manila from 1837-1848, who published "Les isles Philippines de leur situation ancienne et actuelle" (The Philippine Islands: Of their condition in ancient times and the present) in Brussels in 1849.

While our relations with Belgium do not make news these days, there is enough in our history to make us take a second look. Some Filipinos studied in Belgium in the late 19th century, including some famous names in the Philippine Revolution and the Filipino-American War like Jose Alejandro and Edilberto Evangelista. "El Filibusterismo" was published in Ghent when Jose Rizal lived in Belgium. Going much further, when Rosario Manalo was Philippine ambassador to Benelux (the countries of Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg), she wanted me to do research on the Belgian moneylenders who financed Magellan's expedition to the Philippines in 1521. Then, of course, there is the little-known story of Leopold King of Belgium who at one point contemplated acquiring the Philippines as a colony, but ended up with the Belgian Congo instead. When a Filipino historian takes the trouble to do some primary source research in the libraries and archives in Brussels, he will surely find more about Philippine-Belgian relations.

LOOKING BACK

To serve as a guide for travelers and investors from Europe, Lannoy listed down all the products and industries available in the Philippines as well as information on customs, taxation and the political situation. He also listed some of the articles imported by the Philippines from Belgium as follows:

"White and unbleached cotton; Spun cotton; Printed cotton and kerchiefs, cloth with large and small checks, spring fabrics, cotton fabrics; Linen cloth in small quantities; Light fabrics; woolen clothes such as prunellas, etc.; Carriage trimmings; Waxed cloth; Tanned leather; Axles; Hardware; Haberdashery; Plate-glass; Cutlery; Nails; Crystal glassware; Window glass and hollow glassware; Crockery; Tulle or net; Gold and silver thread; Stationery; Brushware; Sailcloth; Cotton umbrellas; Copper sheets and nails; Oil colors; Butter; iron; Steel; Cotton velvet; Hats; and Rugs."

From these imports, one can also tell what kind of people lived in Manila in the 19th century, their needs and their wants. In a sense, they had come a long way since the Chinese brought silk, porcelain, iron and umbrellas in pre-colonial times.

The Philippines and the Filipinos had also developed more appetite for imported goods since Magellan brought gifts of brightly colored cloth, little bells, mirrors and other trinkets. It is also significant to note what items were exempted from customs tariffs and what was prohibited. Only the following items were banned from entering Philippine ports: pocket pistols, Spanish books printed outside the peninsula, and "gunpowder, rum and arack, crude and manufactured tobacco, opium, and finally all agricultural and industrial products similar to those of the country."

With regard to books, other 19th-century travelers noted that customs officers were particularly keen on the import ban on Bibles. Filipinos were not allowed to read Bibles by themselves as the Church was worried about a literal or worse, an interpretation of Scriptures that run counter to that taught by the friars.

This explains why Rizal bought a Bible when he went abroad to study. Some people misinterpret this as faith or devotion on his part, when it was simply intellectual curiosity. Filipinos were not allowed to own or read Bibles on their own in the Spanish period. Bookstores today have lots of Bibles in stock that come in all shapes, colors and sizes.

Exempt from customs duties were the following: alembics, pumps and machines; horses, goats and pigs; dye stuffs (except cochineal); flower and herb seeds; drawing paper; wood for shipbuilding called tec [teak?]; silver and gold minted and in bars; cotton thread for weaving, red, yellow, pink and green colors.

One wonders at the rationale for the above exemptions. Gold and silver came in tax free? Why were certain animals exempt from tariff? Does this mean that you had to pay taxes if you brought in cows, fowl or dogs? Why were customs duties waived on certain colors of cotton thread but not others? Lannoy's now stale data provide a glimpse of economic life in the mid-19th century but more importantly, gives us perspective and an appreciation for life in the 21st century.

Let's go after media extortionists

THE DEPARTMENT of Justice should thoroughly investigate the extortion racket allegedly being operated by a group of media practitioners in the guise of conducting an anti-graft campaign.

Even as media legitimately ask the government to go after the killers of media men (nearly 50 journalists have been murdered since the 1980s), they should also continuously purge the rotten apples from their ranks.

We call on the justice department, government prosecutors and the courts to enforce the full force of the law against media personalities who give the profession a bad name. By using the journalism profession as a cover for their unlawful acts, these individuals are not only violating the penal code, they are also undermining an institution that is vital to the preservation of our democratic way of life. They are destroying the credibility of the journalistic profession.

By claiming to undertake a campaign against corruption, while themselves extorting money through blackmail, these pen-wielding rogues are likewise sabotaging the government's drive against corruption.

The officials of the Department of Transportation and Communications should be commended for standing fast against the threats of the group. They have done the country a good service by exposing this gang of extortionists.

All media organizations—print and broadcast—should cooperate with the investigating agencies to show that they are sincere in upholding the integrity of the journalistic profession and freedom of the press.

UP economists' proposals questioned

I APPRECIATE my University of the Philippines co-alumni who were the subject of the news report "UP economists warn of RP crash in 2 years." (PDI, 8/23/04) However, I question the wisdom of their espousal of new taxes on fuel, vehicle registration and the oh-so-beloved value added tax—an idea that goes against the economic principle of supply and demand.

It may generate more revenues at the start, but only for a very short while. It will surely depress the economy more rapidly over the long term as it will discourage new investments and consumer activity because of further reduced take-home pay and ballooning inflation.

Manage the new laws well? As it is, the government can't even enforce the existing laws; and its bureaucracy discourages small but job-generating businesses which could provide new sources of additional government revenues.

The Philippine government imposes on its citizens punitive and redundant taxes that are extremely higher than those charged by most advanced countries. At current tax rates, you would think government could provide the necessary nationwide infrastructure for development, reliable basic services like power and water, and nationalized health care. Instead, it is known all over the world that 40 percent of our country's national funds are stolen by our officials.

President Macapagal-Arroyo and her administration should think of seriously addressing this and other types of graft and corruption first before asking the long-suffering, hard-working and honest Filipinos to sacrifice even more.

Now comes specter of water rate increase

FIRST it was oil. Now it's water.

The Supreme Court decision declaring all local water districts in the country as government-owned or controlled corporations—subjecting them to pay numerous taxes and fees and other exactions they were previously exempted from paying by virtue of a government promise, as well as to remit half of their net earnings to the National Treasury—will force water districts to pass on such costs to their consumers by way of water rate increases.

With the tumult that rising oil prices continue to stir in our country, isn't it a glaring overkill to trouble every household with an impending increase in the price of such basic necessity as water?

Just as it protected each and every Filipino consumer from the brunt of power rate hikes, I just hope the Supreme Court, for the sake of giving Filipinos the security of affordable drinking water, will reconsider its decision.

Power and generating capacity

I REFER to the Special Report: "Napocor: A cross RP has to bear" (PDI, 8/17/04) by Abigail L. Ho.

The series is timely, informative and well written, except that it fails to clarify to readers that "power" and "generating capacity" are altogether two different things. "Power" means the actual electrical energy in the system; "generating capacity" is the rated capacity of the generating plants (various independent power producers plus Napocor).

Hence, while we have excess generating capacity, we choose not to generate excess power because to do so would be absurdly wasteful.

We have been languishing (since the late '90s) in the very large excess generating capacity that FVR-Viray et al. contracted with the independent power producers in very cavalier fashion under the extraordinary emergency power (which was abused) granted by Congress.

Ho should rectify this confusion between the terms for the benefit of the public—including some of our legislators.

THANK you for pointing out the difference between power and generating capacity. You were right in your definitions. The difference might not have been explained in much detail in the article. But it was not my intention to create confusion. I only wanted to simplify a highly convoluted issue.

Decide on Filipinos' side

THIS is in reaction to the story "US envoy says RP no longer part of the coalition," which was published on the front page of the Aug. 10 issue of the INQUIRER.

President Macapagal-Arroyo must not be frightened by this "kick-out" style of American policy. Her decision to pull out the RP mission from Iraq was right. For over a century now, our country has been dependent on the United States for many of our needs, but this has not made us grow as a nation. We are a sovereign nation. Our government must stand by what is right for its people.

President George W. Bush lied to the world when he said that the United States was going to war against Iraq to destroy Saddam Hussein's weapons of mass destruction. Until now, no WMD has been found.

On pork barrel

POLITICIANS are crazy for pork. They cheat in the elections for it. Project beneficiaries are lucky if they get 30 percent of these funds. Ghost projects are all over the country.

There are very few politicians who are honest with their pork barrel; but the good they do with their pork does not justify the evils that the pork barrel system engenders.—Jun Mercado, Wye, Ashford, Kent, UK, via e-mail

VOICES ON INQ7.NET

Allocating pork barrel to each member of Congress is not proper. The legislative branch may enact laws authorizing the implementation of projects and appropriate funds for such projects; but, beyond that, they are not supposed to exercise control over the funds.—Elsa Bayani, 3708 North Hills Blvd., North Little Rock, Arkansas 72116, via e-mail

One wishes that your editorial writer would highlight the more significant and obviously problematic causes of the fiscal crisis, more than the pork barrel of legislators. By the writer's own admission, "even if ... abolished, the government would save only about P20 billion, a little over 2 percent of next year's proposed budget."

For starters, why not talk about the fact that, last year, the government gave the private business sector P229 billion worth of fiscal incentives, which should have been more than enough to cover the targeted budget deficit of P197.8 billion at the end of this year?

The recently launched Alliance of Concerned Citizens-Opposed to Unjust, New Taxes (ACCOUNT) said that improving tax collection and administration is a better alternative to legislating new tax laws.

By the way, you might also mention that among those who organized ACCOUNT, as well as the group of congressmen called Alliance of Legislators Against Regressive Taxes (ALERT), are Bayan Muna representatives, including Teddy Casiño. He is the same party-list representative you chose to castigate in four paragraphs of your editorial for daring to suggest that the Priority Development Assistance Fund (PDAF) is not the major cause of the perennial problem of government deficits. It is, Casiño correctly pointed, the propensity of the government—since the time of Marcos up to the present administration of Arroyo—to kowtow to the anti-people impositions of the International Monetary Fund-World Bank as well as to toady to multinational banks and corporations.

One wishes that this is just an example of your editorial writer's myopia, an attempt to pander to a popular but mistaken view attributing all our fiscal woes to graft and corruption.

Unfortunately, I have a sneaky feeling it may have something to do with the likely demolition job on Bayan Muna, which has demonstrated its vastly superior political will to fight off government attempts to squeeze blood from our extremely hard-up and hard-pressed people. Truly "the exercise of political will is what we need," as your editorial so aptly put it. Too bad, you demand it of Bayan Muna rather than from the more obvious choice—the Arroyo administration.—Carol Araullo, 1 Maaralin, Central District, QC, via e-mail

Abolishing the pork barrel will hardly make a dent on the P5.39-trillion public debt. Neither would it increase the number of farm-to-market roads unless kickbacks are eliminated in all government projects.—Nicolas R. Gomez Sr., 416 Heathcliff Dr., Pacifica, CA 94044 USA, via e-mail

I believe congressmen should lead by example in saving on costs due to the crisis we're in right now. Instead of sports utility vehicles, which consume a lot of expensive fuel, let them use Asian utility vehicles, like FXs, and those that consume less fuel. Or better yet, let them travel in car pools.—Jojo Makimkim, Dhahran, Saudi Arabia, via e-mail

Journalist killer is still at large

ZAMBOANGA CITY—Police have tapped an unidentified person to serve as negotiator for the surrender of former police officer Guillermo Wapile, who was tagged as the murderer of Pagadian City journalist Edgar Damalerio.

Chief Supt. Servando Hizon, Western Mindanao police director, issued this statement while denying reports Wapile had been arrested.

Earlier, reports quoting Philippine National Police Director General Edgar Aglipay said Wapile had been arrested on Tuesday night.

"Perhaps General Aglipay was misquoted," Hizon said.

Hizon said it was Wapile's wife who was taken into police custody and not the suspected gunman.

"Wapile's wife is now with us," Hizon said.

He said the wife has volunteered to help, which boosted optimism the police would get Wapile sooner than expected.

"We have already established direct contact with PO1 Wapile... and, in due time, we will get him," he said.

Hizon gave no details of Wapile's whereabouts, other than that the suspect was not in Mindanao.

Hizon said based on the initial feedback from the emissary, Wapile was "willing to make himself available before the court."

Optimism

He said with the latest development, police were optimistic that Wapile would yield before the week ended.

"We will get him within this week," Hizon said.

He said the former police officer insisted he was not involved in the May 13, 2002 murder of the journalist.

Damalerio was on his way home from a press conference when shot.

Witnesses tagged Wapile as the gunman.

Wapile was taken into custody by then Zamboanga del Sur provincial director Supt. Pedrito Reyes but disappeared two days before the court issued a warrant for his arrest.

In Mati, Davao Oriental, a broadcaster who took over slain commentator Jun Pala's time slot in the Davao City-based dxGO Aksyon Radyo said unidentified suspects sent him P2,500 cash as "death aid."

Frank Gupit said the money and the note were placed in an envelope. He believes the suspects wanted to scare him.

"I am not afraid to die because no one will last in this world, all of us will die," he said.

Gupit has been critical of several politicians in Davao Oriental, including Gov. Maria Elena Palma Gil.

Other murders

While police continue to fail to solve the murders of journalists, a coalition of fishermen in Quezon are demanding an investigation on the death of four of their colleagues allegedly in the hands of government soldiers.

The group Pamalakaya said the four were murdered from 2001 to the 2004 May elections.

"Justice is non-negotiable. We will carry out the campaign and have those evil minds behind this string of political repression and murders punished," said the group in a statement.

The "Justice for Pamalakaya 5" movement is composed of relatives, friends and supporters of the four fishermen who were killed and the wife of one of them, who survived an attack.

On Nov. 23, 2002, alleged members of "Bonnet Gang" murdered Pamalakaya-Puerto Galera official Oscar Saccalan inside his house in Barangay Tabinay, Puerto Galera, Mindoro Oriental.

Two days later, the headless body of Anthony Martinez, another Pamalakaya-Puerto Galera leader, was found a few kilometers away from the town's poblacion.

2 more drown in Pampanga as flooding continues

CITY OF SAN FERNANDO—Two more people drowned in Pampanga as draining floodwaters rose and continued to spill unto the province's coastal villages.

The Provincial Disaster Coordinating Council identified the latest fatalities on Wednesday as Erwin Maniaul, 35, of Paralaya in Candaba town and Hazel Fajardo, 10, of Sta. Lucia Anac in Masantol.

These brought to six the death toll from flood-related incidents in Pampanga since typhoons Marce and Chaba raged last week.

A week after the height of the disaster, at least 176 of Pampanga's 507 villages were still under two to eight feet of water, the PDCC said.

These were villages in the towns of Macabebe, Masantol, Minalin, Arayat, Sasmuan, Apalit, Sta. Rita, Guagua, Sto. Tomas, Sta. Ana, Candaba, San Luis and San Simon and the City of San Fernando.

The number of flood-affected residents increased to 681,820 even as Pampanga enjoyed largely fair weather since Sunday.

Gov. Mark Lapid said the damages to crops have reached P110.6 million; fisheries, P20.4 million, and infrastructures, P8 million.

As of 2 p.m. on Thursday, public works officials were confirming reports that a section of the Arayat-Apalit levee, a secondary dike to the Arnedo Dike, had burst.

Classes suspended

In Bulacan, classes in elementary and high school in Calumpit town remained suspended for over a week due to floodwaters. Some schools in the town were used as evacuation centers, according to Mayor James de Jesus.

He said residents from 11 villages had to deal with floodwaters six feet high.

De Jesus said the floodwaters that came from Pampanga, Tarlac and Nueva Ecija on Friday were partly caused by the destruction of a small dike along the Pampanga River control system in Apalit.

Tarsier smuggling foiled

By Chito A. Fuentes

CORELLA, Bohol—Personnel of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources (DENR) released two tarsiers on Tuesday, three days after they were recovered in a botched smuggle attempt at the Tagbilaran City airport.

Vilma Elle, Ma. Corazon Colarines, Basilides Orioque and Victor Pondoc freed the tarsiers to the Philippine Tarsier Foundation Inc. (PTFI) conservation site in Canapnapan, Corella, about 12 kilometers from Tagbilaran.

The tarsiers paused briefly after Elle, Colarines and Orioque gently placed them on tree branches before they disappeared into a forested portion of the 167-hectare conservation site.

On Saturday morning, a still unidentified passenger of a Philippine Airlines flight bound for Manila abandoned two coconut shells that looked like kalamay containers.

Kalamay is a famous Boholano delicacy. Cooked primarily in the town of Jagna, it is popular as pasalubong (take-home gift) packed inside coconut shells.

Airport personnel became suspicious upon seeing the abandoned coconut shells and were surprised to see a tiny foot jut out of one shell.

DPWH asked to repair dike in Tarlac town

By Carlito Pablo
and Jerome Aning

THE DEPARTMENT of Public Works and Highways was called on yesterday to prioritize the repair of a collapsed dike in Paniqui, Tarlac, which was damaged by heavy flooding in the past several days.

The request was made by Rep. Gilberto Teodoro Jr. (NPC, Tarlac), warning that thousands of lives and millions of pesos worth of properties are under threat by future flooding if the breached dike in Colibangbang, Paniqui, is not immediately repaired.

Teodoro represents the first district of Tarlac which include Paniqui, one of the hardest hit towns in the province by floods last week.

"We expect heavy downpour to continue in the coming days. If this happens, the sheer volume of water coming out of the collapsed dike will submerge the whole town under water," Teodoro said in a statement.

Thousands of Paniqui residents from 20 barangays were earlier evacuated as floodwaters submerge several areas in the municipality.

"More barangays would be under water because of the collapsed dike. The effect of this in the lives and livelihood of the people of Paniqui and nearby towns is unimaginable," Teodoro said.

The Colibangbang dike is part of the Agno River Flood Control Project under the Project Management Office of the DPWH.

Teodoro is also coordinating with the Department of Agriculture for the provisions of seeds needed to replant rice farms destroyed by the fire.

Public Works Secretary Florante Soriquez said he wants reports on the status of infrastructure projects all over the country to reach his office faster.

He has ordered the newly created Project Monitoring Group to come up with its monthly report in 10 days. The PMG used to have 15 days to process its report.

Soriquez required project engineers to submit their accomplishment reports to the regional and district offices and the local project monitoring offices as early as the 25th of every month.

DPWH chief orders strict vehicle rules

BE STRICT in the allocation of vehicles to support the President's call for government officials and agencies to observe cost-cutting measures.

This was the order made by Public Works Secretary Florante Soriquez to the Bureau of Equipment following the transfer or reassignment of officials of the department who reportedly bring with them the vehicles assigned to their respective offices.

Through Department Order No. 117, the DPWH head directed his subordinates that no service vehicles assigned to one office should be transferred to another without the approval of the head of the Bureau of Equipment, as all DP-

WH service vehicles are under the custodial responsibility of the bureau.

This would ensure that the successors of assigned or transferred personnel would be able to use the service vehicles assigned to their offices, the DPWH head said.

DPWH service vehicles are vital in supervising and monitoring infrastructure projects, Soriquez said, emphasizing that the said vehicles are assigned to the department, not to particular individuals.

Soriquez added that tightening vehicle allocations would lower operating and maintenance costs in the agency.

Baguio dump swallows 2 bulldozers

BAGUIO CITY—The torrential rains triggered by two typhoons last week softened Baguio's only landfill to virtual pulp and buried two of the city's waste management equipment.

Romeo Concio, Baguio chief of the Office of General Services (OGS), said the unusual phenomenon prevented Baguio's 90 garbage men from collecting trash for almost a week during the rains.

He said runoff water from the sustained rains formed a small lake at the heart of the dump. Two bulldozers stationed there sank all the way down the softened garbage bowl.

"Only the roof of the bulldozers were visible. We managed to pull out one bulldozer last weekend, but the other bulldozer is still buried," he said.

"This is the first time our equipment was swallowed by garbage in my 10 years of working here," he added.

Rains were also blamed for a sinkhole that opened up on Friday at a section of Burnham Park, where the bust of Daniel Burnham stands.

The park and lake were named after Burnham, the American architect who designed Baguio City at the turn of the 20th century.

Heavy load

Baguio needs to collect 1,080 tons of garbage that have been abandoned since Thursday, based on estimates given by garbage collectors themselves.

The collectors have been put on 24-hour work until all the garbage is collected and delivered to the dump.

Garbage collectors have to concentrate on downtown Baguio and the city public market, where refuse have piled up five feet high.

Routine pickup has resumed for some barangays, although many villages have to contend with noxious fumes from decomposing garbage that are left open to the elements.

But instead of a pat on the back, the OGS employees were surprised when the backlog was linked to a sabotage attempt against the new city administration because of a scheduled reorganization that would fuse the OGS with a new environment office by Sept. 1.

City employees have objected to the city streamlining plan that will cut down the city government's work force. It was proposed before the May 2004 elections by former Mayor Bernardo Vergara, and was incorporated in the 2004 city budget by the previous city council.

Privatization

The Vergara administration had also proposed to privatize garbage collection, a part of its efficiency drive.

Mayor Braulio Yaranon announced to the employees during the Monday flag-raising ceremony at City Hall that he would not implement the reorganization plan, after his aides looked into the city's week-long garbage crisis.

"We will never deliberately abandon garbage. It takes longer for us to scrape decomposed garbage. We can't even hurl it at the truck so it takes us more time to load up and deliver the trash to the dump," Concio said.

But the crisis should persuade barangays to consider recycling, he said. Only three barangays have initiated waste segregation programs, in lieu of an ordinance that requires all households to separate organic from inorganic trash, OGS documents show.

The city government is operating a 20-ton composting facility, which will process the market's daily refuse. The Department of Agriculture has certified the plant's production as suitable farm input materials.

But the plant needs to be expanded to process Baguio's 150-ton organic waste each day, Concio said.

RP, China to explore defense cooperation

By TJ Burgonio

BEIJING (via PLDT)—The Philippines and China agreed "in principle" yesterday to hold high-level talks on possible defense cooperation to ensure security in Asia, a top official accompanying President Macapagal-Arroyo on her China visit said.

"This is the beginning of a new era in defense cooperation," Communications Director Silvestre Afable Jr. said in a briefing after the meeting between Ms Arroyo and Jiang Zemin, former Chinese president and now chair of the Central Military Commission.

"This will involve high-level exchanges of visitations of defense officials here. Maybe [we can] start with some kind of personnel training and expanded intelligence sharing," Afable said.

He said it was too premature to talk about the holding of joint exercises between the two countries.

After meeting with Jiang, Ms Arroyo directed Defense Secretary Avelino Cruz "to begin high-level talks" with Chinese officials on defense cooperation, Afable said.

"She was assured by Chairman Jiang that he will receive Secretary Cruz," he added.

Afable said he expected the talks to begin soon, noting that China had shown "great interest" in pursuing the matter.

"It's part of the overall framework of security cooperation that China and the Philippines are trying to build so that we can have peace and stability in Southeast Asia," he said.

Afable said defense exchanges between the two countries in the past had been virtually non-existent.

"It is only now that it has been agreed upon in principle by the highest leadership of both countries," Afable said.

The talks with Jiang highlighted the second day of Ms Arroyo's three-day state visit.

Ms Arroyo met with Jiang and later Premier Wen Jiabao at the Zhongnanhai, the headquarters of the Communist Party of China.

Ms Arroyo and the Chinese leaders also reached a consensus to work for the transformation of the South China Sea from an "area of conflict" to "an area of cooperation," according to Afable.

"This was also the theme of talks between President Arroyo and President Hu [Jintao] yesterday," he said.

"In both meetings it was agreed that we have reached the highest point of relations between the Philippines and China," he added, citing improved relations in trade and agriculture.

China and the Philippines are among the six countries which have laid claim to the disputed, potentially oil-rich Spratly Islands in the South China Sea.

an translated Zhu's briefing on the history of the warriors.

Ms Arroyo returned to Beijing after the museum tour and met with Jiang Zemin, former president and chair of the Central Military Commission, at around 4 p.m. at the Zhongnanhai, the headquarters of the Communist Party of China.

She later met with Premier Wen Jiabao at the same venue.

She was scheduled to meet with the Filipino community at the Kerry Center Hotel last night.

By accident

The terra cotta warriors were accidentally discovered in 1974 by Chinese peasants digging a well.

The discovery drew archaeologists, who found that the warriors were situated around the mausoleum of Emperor Qin Shi Huang.

Upon assuming the throne at the age of 13 in 246 B.C., Qin ordered work on his tomb started. He also ordered a massive clay army to be produced for his protection in the afterlife.

As many as 6,000 clay figures were found in the first discovered site.

The second excavation took place in 1976, yielding 1,400 warriors, and the third in 1980. The third pit held only one chariot and six warriors.

5 agreements

On Wednesday, the first day of her three-day state visit to China, Ms Arroyo flew to Guangdong province for a briefing on the deadly Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome.

After lunch, she flew to Beijing where she held bilateral talks with President Hu Jintao and witnessed the signing of five agreements in the afternoon. (See related story in Business, Page B1.)

She invited Hu to visit Manila in June 2005 on the occasion of the 30th anniversary of RP-China relations. Hu accepted the invitation.

After the talks, the Chinese leaders hosted a banquet for Ms Arroyo and her party.

Among the agreements between China and the Philippines is the joint study of potential oil deposits in the disputed Spratly Islands.

The agreement, signed by China National Offshore Oil Corp. and Philippine National Oil Co., "is not an oil exploration understanding but merely a cooperative and joint study on the oil potentials of the South China Sea area claimed by both China and the Philippines," Malacañang communications director Silvestre Afable said.

The two state firms agreed to a three-year joint research project on the "petroleum resource potential in certain areas of the South China Sea."

"It will be a pre-exploration study solely to collect, process and analyze seismic data. No drilling or development is covered under the study," they said.

The Philippines and China have territorial claims over the Spratlys, which sit on rich fishing grounds and reported vast oil reserves, and lie near key sea lanes.

The islands are also claimed wholly or in part by Brunei, Malaysia, Taiwan and Vietnam. With an AFP report try's slide into a fiscal crisis.

"We really have to adjust the rates because we cannot sustain the low rates indefinitely. This is part of the sacrifice that will be called and we expect everybody to pitch in," Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye said at a briefing.

Napocor's petition for an average P1.85 per kilowatt-hour rate hike would boost its revenues by P75 billion, according to the Department of Finance and mean an end to the government's subsidy amounting to P60 billion this year.

The rate hike, which is still under review by the Energy Regulatory Commission, will nearly double the current rates for Napocor customers in its three main grids in Luzon, the Visayas and Mindanao.

Staying afloat

Because the high LPG prices had eroded their incomes, small restaurants, caterers and even the famous "Jolliejeeps" in the backstreets of Makati have also had to do some belt-tightening of their own.

Ma. Jesusa Palad, mother of two and owner of Gugu's Catering, said small caterers like her had been having trouble coping with the rising cost of cooking gas, especially as this accounted for 15 percent of her operational expenses.

"It's like I'm under water and I can hardly breathe. I have to push harder to take some air in before plunging back," she relates. "The increasing prices are like that. As a businesswoman, I always have to push harder, struggle to stay afloat."

Even with the rising cost of LPG, Palad said she struggles to stay in business because of her employees—the waiters who have families of their own to feed—as well as her loyal customers.

If she closes shop, her employees would surely suffer, she said. When times get better in the future and she decides to go back to business, she will have lost her loyal clientele.

Despite the high operational costs, she says she has managed to keep her prices steady.

However, some cost-cutting measures are currently being implemented to ensure that her business does not fold up.

For parties and functions of her more frequent clients and close friends, she relates that she cuts down the number of waiters from five to three to save on wages.

This way, she is able to maintain her prices while managing to stay afloat. But she admits that this cannot go on forever, especially for small businesses like hers.

"We'll die. Bigger caterers can bring down their prices to match ours. Where are we going? There's so little business and too many business people. We hardly earn anything at all," she said.

While many are reeling from the rising cost of cooking gas, store owner and father of three Allan Daquiz has remained quite calm.

LPG PRICES

Jan 2003 to Sep 1, 2004, peso per 11-kg cylinder commodities and tuition are what gets him worried.

"But we get by. Maybe when I buy LPG again, I'll notice the increase and say 'how expensive.' But then again, it's okay. I'm more blessed than many others anyway," he said.

Major LPG suppliers

Arnel Tay, the association's president, said in a telephone interview yesterday that major LPG suppliers had already raised the prices of cooking gas by P2 a kilogram.

LPG refillers, some of the major players' biggest customers, were among the first to feel the increase, he said.

"But we've decided to pass on only P1.50 to our customers. We're absorbing the 50 centavos," he said.

He said LPG dealers had sought a discount from the big suppliers but this was not granted.

Major players Petron Corp., Pilipinas Shell Petroleum Corp., Caltex Philippines Inc. and Total (Philippines) Corp. have yet to announce their price adjustments, however.

In fact, Petron, Caltex and Total categorically denied that they had already raised their prices. Shell officials could not be reached for comment.

But an industry source revealed that Shell had, in fact, already raised LPG prices by P1 per kilogram.

Worsening crisis

Bunye earlier admitted in an interview with dzRH radio that the President's decision stopping Napocor from increasing power rates in 2002 contributed to the government's worsening crisis.

"Everybody knows it's one of the causes and it's true (it is the biggest reason)," Bunye said.

In May 2002, Ms Arroyo ordered the state utility firm to temporarily lower its controversial purchased power adjustment charge by P1.25 per kWh to a uniform 40 centavos per kWh.

The President bowed to the clamor of the people to stop soaring electricity rates as she ignored warnings from the Senate that the move would bloat the budget deficit by P48 billion annually.

Bunye said that in solving the fiscal crisis, the government could not choose between raising power rates or imposing new taxes.

"It will have to be a combination of measures," said Bunye, who promised that the government would adopt safety nets to ensure that poor households would not be made to pay higher rates.

While the P80 billion to be raised from the eight revenue measures being pushed by the government would address the projected national government budget deficit of P198 billion, the Napocor rate hike would address the rest of the P112-billion financing shortfall in the P312-billion consolidated public sector deficit.

Aside from raising revenues, Napocor said the rate hike would encourage more foreign investors to put up new generation facilities that would beef up the power supply and avert a looming power crisis in the next three to five years.

The rate hike is on top of the P600 billion in Napocor debts that the government will absorb as part of the restructuring of the power industry. It will also end the P50 billion annual financial charges shouldered by the government.

JDV gets P350M in pledges on plane over China Sea

said he had secured pledges from its passengers amounting to P350 million.

"I told them we have to save the country," De Venecia told reporters accompanying President Macapagal-Arroyo on her state visit to China.

De Venecia apparently spared no one.

His donors included Ms Arroyo and her husband, First Gentleman Jose Miguel Arroyo, members of the Cabinet and most of the 105 businessmen—including the taipans—who had joined the trip.

One businessman grumbled. "This is my most expensive foreign trip," he was quoted by a colleague as having groaned during the one-and-a-half-hour flight from Beijing to Xi'an City. (See related story on Page A1.)

Chinese-Filipino businessmen on the plane were asked to make their pledges, ranging from P200,000 to P2 million.

De Venecia, who launched a special fund to help the cash-strapped government, chose to deliver his pitch during the flight apparently to make sure no one escaped.

The "victims" included beer and cigarette magnate Lucio Tan and Jimmy Tang, who each pledged P2 million, according to the Speaker.

Others made a P1-million pledge each—Robin Sy, president of the Filipino-Chinese Chamber of Commerce, his executive vice president Francis Chua, Alfredo Yao, William Co, Joseph Chan, Domingo Chan and Henry Lim Bon Liong.

Serge Ortiz-Luis of Philippines Inc. and Coalition 100 said nobody was forced to contribute.

"You don't have to agree if you don't want to," he said.

Ortiz-Luis said his group, Coalition 100, pledged P100 million. "We would like to create a critical mass so we can encourage everyone, including the overseas workers, to give something regularly," he said.

Ms Arroyo, her husband and brother-in-law Rep. Ignacio Arroyo pledged P1 million each.

Trade Secretary Cesar Purisima, Agriculture Secretary Arthur Yap and Energy Secretary Vincent Perez each promised to shell out P500,000 from their own pockets, and Tourism Secretary Robert Pagdanganan, P200,000.

No pushover

Opposition Sen. Aquilino Pimentel Jr. drove a hard bargain.

"It's good symbolically although it can also backfire. From the point of view of pessimists, this is a gesture of panic," Pimentel said.

He maintained that the most effective way to check the country's fiscal crisis was for lawmakers to give up their countrywide development fund, or pork barrel.

The other businessmen who made a P500,000 pledge each were John Tan, Robert Sy, Joseph Lim, Seferino Benedicto, Stephen Sy, William Go, Joaquin Soliman, Rufino Copio and Siyap Chua, among others.

The rest promised P200,000 and P100,000 each.

Apart from individual contributions, the Filipino-Chinese Chamber of Commerce also pledged some P57 million, the Chinese Philippine Business Club, P300,000, and the Federation of the Philippine Chamber of Commerce, P56 million.

More next week

"When I started the move two-and-a-half days ago, with my P1 million donation, my idea was to raise P5 billion," De Venecia said.

"With one single sweep, we can build 20,000 school houses, and install 20,000 computers so that our students can compete with the German, Japanese, European and American students," De Venecia added.

The President directed Finance Secretary Juanita Amatong to receive the pledges and issue receipts.

De Venecia said he was heartened by the outpouring of support from wealthy families and that he expected more donations to come in next week.

At least four other congressmen have each donated P100,000 while 37 others agreed to give up one month of their basic pay, or P35,000 each.

Akbayan party-list Rep. Riza Hontiveros said all three congressmen from her party-list group would also give up their one month pay and agree to a 50 percent cut in their pork barrel allocations.

El Shaddai evasive

The wealthy Catholic charismatic group El Shaddai evaded the issue of government taxing religious organizations, and instead announced it was spearheading a movement to raise at least P100 million to help the poor.

El Shaddai spokesperson Mel Robles said the group would raise at least P1 million each from 100 "men of goodwill who are truly concerned with our country."

He said El Shaddai spiritual leader Bro. Mike Velarde would give the first P1 million for the movement, called "Koalisyon Sandaan."

Robles did not categorically say if El Shaddai was against the proposal for the government to tax the church and other religious organizations.

He said that the money collected would be used to create a fund to provide credit to the poor.

Rewarding wrongdoers

Couples for Christ, whose members worldwide total one million, refused to comment on the proposal, saying these things needed to be discussed in a council.

But Bangon Pilipinas spokesperson Luis Sison, a member of the CFC, denounced taxing religious groups as tantamount to "rewarding wrongdoers" in government.

"Why are you punishing the clergy, who's doing the work of God?" Sison said. "Why raise money for the leadership, so it has more to steal?"

Mindanao businessmen were not inclined to contribute part of their resources to help solve the fiscal crisis without the government cleaning up its act first.

Sofronio Jucutan, president of the Davao City Chamber of Commerce and Industry, said: "Filipinos will not do that if they are not sure where their money will go."

Davao City Councilor Pete Lavina said the government's call for austerity measures was only for show.

"The President claimed that she will lead by example and not even a week later, she (went) on a junket with her family to China," he said.

Antonio Santos, chair of the Mindanao Business Council, said small enterprises, which make up the bulk of Mindanao businesses, were already in financial distress and the planned new taxes and power rate increase would spell their end.

Mindanao power bloc

"If push comes to shove, more business establishments in Mindanao will either close shop or re-trench workers by the end of the year," he said.

In Cagayan de Oro City, local government units formed the Mindanao Power Bloc to oppose the planned power rate increase.

Some Church officials in the Visayas welcomed with reservations Davao Archbishop Fernando Capalla's call for the clergy to donate some of their income to the government.

"Should the good citizens, who pay their taxes diligently, sacrifice while the corrupt officials continue to enjoy?" said Msgr. Meliton Oso, Jaro Archdiocese action director.

Pork audit

At the Senate, the Liberal Party, called on the Commission on Audit to scrutinize the pork barrel-funded projects of all lawmakers in the face of allegations that these were ridden with corruption.

"We leave it to the COA to determine which period should be covered," said Senate President Franklin Drilon, one of five senators who had declared their readiness to give up their entire P200 million pork barrel allocations for next year. *With reports from Cynthia D. BIR comes up with 'magical P10B' more in its August collection

IS THE Bureau of Internal Revenue (BIR) fudging its tax collection data?

This question surfaced yesterday as the BIR produced what Rep. Joey Salceda (Lakas-Kampi, Albay) called a "magical P10 billion" to shore up its revenue collection for August.

Relying on a BIR report to the House ways and means committee on Aug. 31, Salceda released a statement Wednesday that the agency had fallen short of its last month's target of P43.1 billion by 31 percent. This meant that revenues for August amounted to only P29.77 billion.

Salceda said in another statement yesterday that BIR Commissioner Guillermo Parayno invited him to breakfast yesterday to claim that the "actual figure is not P29.77 billion but a little over P40 billion versus the P43.11 billion goal."

"That is P10 billion more coming in the dying seconds of the month (August)," Salceda said. "In front of me, he (Parayno) admonished his staff over the blunder."

Salceda, the resident economist of the House, said he accepted Parayno's explanation on the "honest mistake."

"For as long as the cash is there, then we have no problem with that," Salceda said.

But still, Salceda raised questions in his statement about the BIR's mistake.

"The country cannot afford a repetition of this sorry event as, aside from feeding Congress garbage as empirical basis for making tax policy, it does not speak well of the quality of the information system at the BIR," he said.

Salceda recalled that when Parayno submitted the BIR report to the ways and means committee three days ago, the BIR chief explained that his report was "prepared at 10 a.m. Aug. 30, 2004 and based on data as of Aug. 27."

Salceda asked that "if it (BIR's original report) was that tentative," then how come it even compared the collection last month with that of August 2003 and added the amount to the January to July 2004 figures to indicate the BIR collection for the first eight months of the year?

When Parayno appeared personally before the committee the next day on Sept. 1, the BIR commissioner did "not even bother to rectify such error that now appears terribly egregious by their own account," he said.

Salceda said that during his breakfast with Parayno yesterday, the BIR chief "laboriously explained the nature of the magical P10 billion in the last one to four days of the month of August."

He said that based on Parayno's explanation, the latest P10 billion collection came from "late regional reporting (that should have already been long cured by a mere e-mail system) and usual month-end-rush of payments to beat deadlines."

"During the breakfast, I gently suggested to the BIR commissioner to be more careful in his official submissions to Congress since sound policy-making can only be based on timely and correct information," the congressman said.

"Moreover, in this period of fiscal crisis, information on BIR collections is of paramount interest to the public, particularly to our creditors and investors, since (BIR collections) compose 82 percent of our tax revenues," Salceda said.

In Cebu City, US Ambassador Frank Ricciardone Jr. yesterday lauded President Macapagal-Arroyo for addressing the country's fiscal crisis.

"Not only President Arroyo identified the need for actions now but also your congressional leaders. Senate leaders have said 'we've got to pull together, we've got to make a sacrifice, we got to share the pain,'" Ricciardone said, recalling some of the statements made by the legislators.

Ricciardone said the US assistant secretary for economic and business affairs was in the country recently "to show the American support for you and encouragement as you face these hard decisions."

"We have a certain amount of economic support programs like the friendly care program, programs to support good governance, economic affairs. We also have our millennium challenge, an initiative to encourage governments around the world to do these hard things: improve governance, meaning anti-corruption," he said.

He gave unsolicited advice to the government—to invest in people.

"Investing in health care, education and doing these things such as liberalizing the economy, are major points. Opening the economy to foreign and domestic investments and training your people to be productive workers (are) also another," he added. *With reports from Carlito Pablo in Manila and Jolene R. Hospitals slam doors on 'A' cases pain reliever). I could not bear the pain in my hips. I did not have an abortion!" she told them.

Her sister asked the doctors if they could give Ellen first aid. They said no.

The two women took a taxi to another government hospital, bigger than the first. After an internal examination, the doctors said that Ellen had probably had an abortion and that it was futile for her to deny it.

Again she explained that she had taken nothing but the pain reliever.

As in the first hospital, the doctors did not believe her. They also told her the hospital had no equipment, no oxygen. They sent her away and made her sign a waiver.

"If you won't admit to having an abortion, we won't accept you here," they shouted. "Do you want to die?"

Ellen and her sister took yet another taxi to yet another public hospital, where yet another internal examination was performed by yet other doctors who shouted at her.

They told her they could not admit her because their limited beds were only for emergency cases.

"Why, isn't my sister an emergency case?" Ellen's sister said.

For the third time in a span of a few hours, Ellen was told she had to sign a waiver and leave.

By then the large towel she had put between her legs to absorb the blood was close to dripping.

She was dizzy, the clawing pain in her stomach was getting unbearable, and there was ringing in her ears.

Take 4

At the fourth hospital—a tertiary hospital in Manila, like the two others—Ellen endured more of the same. But she refused to sign a waiver this time.

"Doc, may I just rest here for a while?" she asked the more sympathetic of the two doctors, a male, who had examined her.

They told her to sit on a bench inside the ER and to sign the waiver when she could walk.

It was now almost 5 a.m.

"I'm so sleepy," Ellen told her sister. She put her head on her sister's shoulder—and blacked out.

Panicked, her sister cried for help. But the doctors said Ellen was just pretending.

Ellen regained consciousness but could barely open her eyes. She struggled against the darkness, thinking how easy it would be to let go and not feel any more pain.

And then she thought of her three daughters. Who will take care of them if she dies?

She heard a woman yell at her: "Walk! You're tiring us!"

"Really, I can't do it," she mumbled.

D&C

Hours later, Ellen underwent a D&C (dilation and curettage, where the cervix is dilated and the uterus is scraped).

She begged the doctors performing the procedure to go slowly and spare her some of the pain.

"You'll have to bear it. You did this to yourself," retorted a doctor who kept on insisting that she had had an abortion.

Four days later, feeling strong enough to walk, she fled the hospital without paying the bill of P1,700.

"That's just payback," Ellen, now 26, told the INQUIRER in an interview last month at her mother's shack in a Pasay City slum. It had been two years after her harrowing experience.

Ellen said the abortion was not intentional, but she intimidated that she was not too happy with her husband—the father of two of her three daughters—when she had the baby.

She said she had ignored the bleeding at first because it was slight, like menstruation. Several times, she said, she took Hemostan 500, tablets used to stem hemorrhage.

But on that fateful night, she became scared and decided that she had to go to a hospital.

Recently, one of Ellen's neighbors—a married woman who worked as a sales clerk—had a spontaneous abortion and lost her first baby. The woman recalled how she was passed from one hospital to another.

"I told her our experience was similar," Ellen said.

er of two, had a spontaneous abortion in March.

She fainted and crumpled to the ground when toughies ganged up on her husband, a garbage truck driver. She was then two months pregnant with a baby they had both wanted.

Myra, 23, went to a nearby hospital, the same one that Ellen had first gone to.

She asked a doctor to give her something to save her baby, but the latter, a woman, told her after an internal examination that it was too late, the baby was "already crushed."

She was told that she had to produce P5,000 for a D&C. She had only P1,000.

Shouting, the doctor accused Myra of aborting her pregnancy. When she began to explain what had happened, the doctor brushed her off.

"She was shouting at me in English. She said I could not even answer a very simple question," Myra recounted to the INQUIRER in an interview, also last month, at the Apelo Women's Health Association clinic in Pasay.

Convinced that she would get the same treatment in other public hospitals, Myra went home.

She now had to get rid of the dead fetus in her womb. She was forced to do what a woman who wanted to induce an abortion would do.

Even 'sioktong'

Myra went to a hilot (midwife) who kneaded her belly thrice daily for three days, at P200 a day.

Later, a close friend who also had a spontaneous abortion referred her to a manggag-amat (traditional healer) in Calamba, Laguna. She was told to drink two concoctions: one of boiled ampalaya (bitter melon) leaves and the other of makabuhay roots.

She tried to religiously drink the prescribed concoctions, but she had to give up because they were too bitter to the taste.

Myra turned to sioktong (a local wine usually taken to relieve menstrual pain), which she bought at P21 a bottle in a nearby grocery. She used a soft drink as a chaser.

"By noon, I would be drunk," she recalled.

Myra then took Cytotec, an antidiarrheal pill used by Filipino women to induce abortion. She took four of the pills that a neighbor offered to her at P100 each.

She did not ask where her neighbor got the pills, which have been banned by the Department of Health.

The neighbor said there were genuine and fake Cytotec pills in the market, but assured her that the ones she had bought were authentic.

In pain

By then Myra was in great pain. Most of the time she lay motionless in bed.

"My belly was so painful," she said. "It was throbbing. I was crying. My whole body was shaking with fear. I kept praying that my baby would cooperate because I had no money for a hospital stay."

The bleeding got worse by the day. When she peed, bits of flesh would swoosh out with the blood.

She told her husband about the bits of flesh, and he said with regret that she should have saved them in a bottle for burial.

Myra thought she would die. She worried about what might happen to her two girls.

One day she finally saw what the manggag-amat had told her to watch for: a lizard-like form.

She had been told that if it did not come out, she would die.

Ultimately the bleeding stopped. When Myra visited a clinic for a checkup, she was told that her body was able to rid itself of the dead fetus.

Five months after the experience, Myra wistfully talked about her and her husband's desire to have that baby.

But she's not taking any chances at the moment; she's been on the pill for two months now. Next: Bias among health care workers

Abuse not unusual for 'A' patients

By Stella O. Gonzales

THE EXPERIENCE of Ellen and Myra is not unusual; it is the norm, as many local studies show.

Dr. Debbie Capuchino of the Department of Health's Family Health Division has heard of many such cases. There were even times, she said, when hospital staff reported the patient to the police.

In at least one case, she said, the hospital branded the patient by putting a tag—"induced abortion"—on her bed, Capuchino said.

Dr. Cynthia Garcia, who once worked with the non-government organization EngenderHealth, said it was not unusual for doctors, nurses or midwives to curse post-abortion women in front of other patients.

"It's as if other people have to know that the woman has undergone an abortion," she said.

There have been instances when the patient was asked to pay even when the hospital's services are free.

Likhaan, an NGO that is doing a study on women's abortion experiences, documented a case wherein a hospital worker threatened to list the patient's name on the police blotter if she would not admit to having an induced abortion.

The patient made the admission and was treated right away, said Dr. Junice Melgar, Likhaan executive director. But only after she was told: "Don't you know that at this moment your soul is burning in hell?"

Melgar said some health care workers defended their conduct thus: to teach the women a lesson so they won't induce an abortion again.

She quoted some doctors as saying that they needed to know whether the abortion was induced because if so, there was a bigger chance of infection.

But even a spontaneous abortion can result in an infection, so there should be no difference in treatment, Melgar noted.

Whether the abortion was spontaneous or induced might be useful information, but doctors and nurses can get this information without resorting to "third-degree," she said, adding:

"The doctors are acting like judges. They say they're doing it 'para madala yung babae (so she won't do it again).'"

According to Dr. Corazon Raymundo of the University of the Philippines' Population Institute, post-abortion women are usually already in a life-threatening situation when they decide to go to a hospital.

"Still they are not treated well kasi makasalanang babae sila (because they're considered sinners)," Raymundo said.

"But the abortion has been done, so what do the doctors think they can still achieve?"

"If they don't want to give these women special attention, then at least give them the kind of attention they would give to other people who come to the hospital with health problems."

"What happened to the Hippocratic Oath our medical doctors have sworn to uphold?"

Garcia agreed: "Doctors are not supposed to be moralists."

"The woman has already committed the 'sin.' How do you now help somebody who is having a complication? That should be the concern of the health care system. Not how she got the health problem, but how to help someone with that health problem."

Huge billboards banned on Metro's major roads

By Margaux C. Ortiz

NO MORE huge billboards on Metro Manila's major and secondary roads.

Citing the dangers these outdoor ads posed on motorists and pedestrians, Metropolitan Manila Development Authority yesterday passed a resolution warning interested parties from installing commercial signs like billboards and streamers in thoroughfares, center islands and street rights-of-way perceived as traffic obstructions.

Violators would face the corresponding penalties, the MMDA added.

MMDA Chair Bayani Fernando said the Metro Manila Council resolution also prescribed the guidelines on the installation and display of billboards and advertising signs along major and secondary thoroughfares within Metro Manila.

In the resolution, the MMDA noted that billboards and advertising signs are "indiscriminately posted in public areas and distract the attention of motorists, thus causing road accidents and traffic."

"It is unlawful for any person, private and public corporations, advertising and promotion companies, movie producers, professionals and service contractors to post, install, display any kind or form of billboards, signs, posters and other visual clutter in any part of the roads, sidewalks, center islands, posts, trees and open spaces," the resolution read.

It also specified that the installation, operation and maintenance of lighted advertising panels endorsing individuals, private organizations and public corporations shall not be allowed on sidewalks, pedestrian overpasses, flyovers, interchanges, traffic signages, communication posts, LRT and MRT terminals, and waiting sheds.

The resolution especially prohibited the installation of dazzling and neon signs; advertisement of cigarettes, tobacco, liquor and prohibited drugs; exhibitions of sexuality and nudity offensive to public morals; and advertisements of sanitary products, birth control devices, underwear and other sensitive products.

Fernando said the MMDA would issue clearances on the installation of signs along major thoroughfares and national roads.

Local government units, on the other hand, would be in charge of local roads.

Violators face a fine of P100 per square foot of the surface space of the advertisement.

A surcharge of 25 percent of the penalty shall be added for failure to pay the fine within seven days. The resolution specified that violators would be fined P20,000 for the second offense.

SENATOR Francis Pangilinan and wife, actress-singer Sharon.

Sharon, Kiko welcome Mariel Daniella Sophia

By Christine O. Avendano

MEGASTAR Sharon Cuneta yesterday gave birth to a baby girl, her second child by husband Majority Leader Sen. Francis Pangilinan.

Cuneta delivered her child via caesarian section at the Asian Hospital in Alabang, Muntinlupa, at about 6:30 a.m.

According to Pangilinan, their new baby would be named Mariel Daniella Sophia or Miel for short.

Miel weighed 8.2 pounds and is 51 centimeters long, according to the proud father.

"We are all extremely happy. Mother and daughter are doing well," Pangilinan said in a text message.

Pangilinan said both he and Cuneta were "teary eyed in the operating room when we heard her (Miel) first cry out."

"Her Ate Frankie is super excited and even sang to her when she was brought to the room," the senator also said, referring to his and Cuneta's other daughter, Frankie, now 3 years old.

Cuneta has another daughter, Kristina Cassandra or KC, from her previous marriage to actor Gabby Concepcion.

Pangilinan said Cuneta's doctors have disallowed any visitors until the movie actress and singer has fully recovered.

Due to the birth of their child, Pangilinan skipped a hearing called by the Senate committee on constitutional amendments yesterday, according to committee chair Sen. Richard Gordon.

It was Gordon who announced the good news to everyone present at the hearing.

Mayors offer own austerity measures

By Nancy C. Carvajal

METRO Manila's 17 mayors are backing President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's move to implement austerity measures to cope with the fiscal crisis, according to Pasay City Mayor Wenceslao "Peewee" Trinidad.

Trinidad is the spokesperson of the Metro Manila Mayors League for the cities of Manila, Pasay, Mandaluyong, Marikina, Pasig, Quezon, Caloocan, Malabon, Valenzuela, Las Piñas, Makati, Muntinlupa and Parañaque, and the municipalities of San Juan, Taguig, Navotas and Pateros.

Measures to be jointly implemented by the local governments include energy conservation and the limiting of travel and overtime services of employees and officials.

All air conditioning units would be shut off at the close of office hours at 5 p.m. as part of the energy conservation measures, Trinidad said, adding that seminars, conferences and training programs previously paid for by the local government would no longer be allowed.

But each mayor could adopt certain measures inherently required in their respective cities and municipalities.

Trinidad said one of the measures he would introduce is the one weekday off, and making Saturday or Sunday a working day so those who have to do business at City Hall can do so on those days.

"This will also be an opportunity to increase our collections," he said.

Las Piñas Mayor Imelda Aguilar, on the other hand, said gasoline subsidies for their vehicles would only be limited to 50 liters a week, and refueling should only be done during weekdays. She also encouraged the recycling of office supplies.

Makati City Information and Community Relations Division head Joselito Salgado said they were ready to do their share and would review some aspects of their expenditures. But he stressed that they would not give up their projects like the Olympic-sized swimming pool in West Rembo and the new Makati Police Headquarters in the heart of the Central Business District.

"These projects were started and funded before the fiscal crisis," Salgado said. "It is not practical if we stop these projects for our Makati constituents." With Margaux C. Ortiz

Probe ordered on QC prison shabu session

By Tina G. Santos

POLICE authorities yesterday ordered an investigation into the reported proliferation of illegal drugs inside the Quezon City Jail, despite the presence of jail guards who were supposed to implement tight measures to prevent its entry.

Three inmates were caught engaging in a shabu session yesterday inside their detention cell.

The suspects, who were earlier detained as suspected drug traffickers, were identified as Hasmang Mali, 25; Muhammad Ali Asdali, 42; and his son, Nelson Asdali, 26.

According to Supt. Cesar Binag, commander of the Central Police District-Kamuning Station, where the inmates were turned over, the discovery of the inmates' illegal activities came after jail guards had conducted a regular inspection of the cell block.

Binag said the prison guards noticed the suspects acting suspiciously inside the Dorm 7 Annex Building at the detention compound.

When guards accosted the three, they found that they were sniffing metamphetamine hydrochloride, or shabu.

Also found in the inmates' possession were drug paraphernalia and at least 14 sachets of shabu.

Binag claimed it was the biggest haul so far in the detention center.

"Because of the number of drug sachets seized from the suspects, it could be possible that the suspects were also selling drugs to their fellow inmates," a police investigator said.

Binag said they were still conducting an investigation to determine if there were lapses in the security measures implemented by jail authorities.

"I think there should be a review of the policies to prevent drugs and other illegal items from entering the jail compound," he added.

However, he surmised that the illegal drugs were most likely smuggled inside the detention center in food packages brought in by friends or relatives visiting the inmates.

Binag added that they could not yet say whether or not prison guards could be held liable for the incident.

It would also be difficult to determine when the illegal drugs were slipped in, he said.

Gun goes off, kills veteran cop

By Leila B. Salaverria

HOMICIDE investigators in Manila never thought they would be investigating the death of one of their own.

But they did just that Wednesday when SPO3 Solomon Bataller died after his service pistol fell and went off accidentally.

The incident happened in front of his 10-year-old son, who was unharmed.

The 49-year-old Bataller, a policeman for 24 years who had several awards to his name for being a veteran crime investigator, was declared dead on arrival at the Ospital ng Sampaloc.

He suffered two gunshot wounds.

Investigator SPO2 Diomedes Labarda said in his report that Bataller was cleaning his 9 mm pistol inside his house on Felina Street, Sampaloc, Wednesday afternoon when the accident took place.

Bataller was watching television with his son, when the pistol slipped from his hands and fell on the floor, police said.

Twice shot

The gun reportedly went off twice, hitting him in the chin and in the chest.

His son then called for help.

Members of the Western Police District said Bataller was a great loss to the police force and his death was a shock to most of them.

"Hindi namin akalain na tumatagatay ang kasamahan namin (We never thought we would be investigating a colleague's death)," said SPO2 Edison Bertoldo, who worked in the morning shift with Bataller.

Colleagues told the INQUIRER that Bataller used to be in the Marines before he joined the police force.

In his stint as a policeman, Bataller worked as an investigator and was named three times as the best investigator of the year. He was also a director of the Manila's Finest Brotherhood Association, Inc.

WPD spokesperson Chief Insp. Gerry Agunod said that since Bataller died while still in active service, his family would be receiving full death benefits for members of the Philippine National Police.

Escapee gives up

THE DRUG suspect who escaped while being escorted to court on Monday surrendered to authorities yesterday morning. This was a huge relief for Mandaluyong warden Supt. Abraham Abella, who was given a week to find escaped suspect Maurillo Marcelo. SPO4 Edmund Espiritu negotiated for Marcelo's surrender, according to Insp. Godofredo Velasco, Kalentong precinct commander. According to Abella, Marcelo had told his wife, Susan, that he wanted to escape to raise bail money for him and his family. Susan and one of their daughters are also in jail on drug charges.

Fire displaces 100 families

TWO PEOPLE were hurt, while some 100 families were left homeless after a fire hit a densely populated community along Congressional Avenue Extension in Sitio Bacood, Barangay Pasong Tamo, in Quezon City yesterday afternoon. One of the victims, Rodeline De Mesa, 27, suffered a cut in her foot while fleeing her burning house. Fire investigators said the blaze started at 2:27 p.m. and was put under control an hour later. Arson investigators have yet to determine the cause of the blaze. About 70 houses were destroyed in the incident.

Dirtiest barangay named

THE METROPOLITAN Manila Development Authority yesterday identified the dirtiest barangays in the metropolis as part of its "Cleanest and Dirtiest Barangay Contest." The dirty barangays were selected on the basis of "garbage sightings" from Oct. 1, 2003 to June 30, 2004. Pasay City's Barangay 145 Zone 16 was named the dirtiest, followed by Quezon City's Barangay Sto. Domingo, Navotas' Barangay North Bay Boulevard (South), Caloocan City's Barangay 38, Zone 4, Manila's Barangay 101 Zone 8, Valenzuela City's Barangay Gen. T. De Leon, Malabon's Barangay Potrero, Makati City's Guadalupe Nuevo, Mandaluyong City's Barangay Plain View, Pateros' Barangay Sta. Ana, and Parañaque City's Barangay Tambo. The MMDA said the cities of Pasig, Marikina, Muntinlupa, Las Piñas and the municipality of San Juan did not have any barangays falling under the "dirtiest category."

Davao lady booters rip Negros XI; Iloilo up

GAMES TODAY (Marikina Sports Center)

3 p.m.—Cebu vs Negros Oriental

ROCK-SOLID Davao completed an expected sweep of its group by eliminating Negros Occidental, 4-0, even as Iloilo remained in the hunt for a semifinal berth in the PFF-SuperFerry National Women's football championship at the Marikina Sports Center.

The Ilonggas, the only side to score against Davao in a 1-3 loss Wednesday, started with all guns firing to whitewash Zamboanga, 13-0.

Showing why they are one of the favorites in the tournament for women 19 years and older, the Davaoenas attacked the Negros goal at will to post their fourth straight win in Group A.

The loss knocked the Bacolod-based booters out of contention in the weeklong event co-organized by the Philippine Football Federation and Marikina City Football Association and backed by Marikina Mayor Marides C. Fernando and the city government.

Iloilo meets Iligan today in one of the four matches postponed from Wednesday due to heavy rain, with the winner taking second place in Group A and most likely advancing to the semifinals of the event supported by adidas, Red Ribbon Bakeshop, Petron, New Pagcor, Unifac and Aboitiz Express.

after a surprising 1-1 draw with Negros Oriental on Wednesday, pummeling Baguio, 7-0, behind Clarissa Lazaro's hat trick.

Top striker Eliza Benitez added a brace (two goals) while Monica Santos and Betina Yang also found their marks for NCR, which temporarily regained the lead in Group A with a 3-1 0 win-draw-loss record.

Negros Oriental stayed in step with the Big City squad, composed of players from La Salle and University of the Philippines, for the group lead by beating Cagayan de Oro-Misamis Oriental, 2-0, in the day's final match. With a report from Musong Castillo

IT seemed unimaginable that this is the same University of the Philippines squad that won only once in the first round.

The UP Maroons scored another shocker with a 74-69 decision over the front-running Ateneo Eagles yesterday for their sixth straight win in the 67th UAAP varsity basketball tournament at the PhilSports Arena.

The Diliman dribblers, who stunned the defending champion Far Eastern Tamaraws only five days ago, posted their longest winning streak in 18 years as they surpassed the five-game roll during their 1986 championship run.

"We're not thinking about the Final Four yet. We're just enjoying the game," said UP coach Lito Vergara after foiling Ateneo's bid for a twice-to-beat advantage in the Final Four.

In the other senior contest, FEU clinched a Final Four slot by thwarting the National University Bulldogs, 78-65, as Arwind Santos posted a double-double with 21 points and 10 rebounds.

"We faced this game knowing that it's full of pressure. Every game is a must win for us. Getting into the Final Four is not just our goal. We want the No. 1 or 2 slot," said FEU coach Koy Banal.

Ateneo and FEU now share top spot at 9-3. UP, the only unbeaten team in the second round, remained in the semifinal race with a 6-6 record.

UP's Toti Almeda, who topscored with 18 points, Abby Santos and Marvin Cruz took charge in the first half as the Maroons opened a 37-26 lead.

Ateneo staged a 12-2 comeback that tied the count at 38-38 in the third quarter and even wrested the lead after an LA Tenorio triple, 64-63, midway in the fourth period.

But UP quickly responded with a 10-3 run for a 73-67 edge, 1:23 remaining.

FEU opened the third quarter with nine unanswered points for a 48-35 advantage.

NU, though, remained close by midway in the fourth quarter, 61-55. But FEU charged with an 11-2 blast for a 72-57 cushion, two minutes left.

THE GAME is important only for the San Sebastian Stags when they battle the Letran Knights today at the close of the NCAA basketball tournament eliminations at the Rizal Coliseum.

The Stags, runners-up last year and champions in the 2002 and 2003 seasons, must prevail in their 4 p.m. date with the defending titlist Knights to gain entry in the Final Four.

Although a loss will drop San Sebastian into a three-way tie with San Beda and Mapua at 7-7, it will be the Lions and the Cardinals who will dispute the fourth slot in a playoff because of their superior tiebreak quotients.

In the other senior game, the Jose Rizal Bombers (4-9) and St. Benilde Blazers (1-12) aim for a decent finish when they meet at 2 p.m.

Letran is already assured of a semifinal seat. A victory today will pit the Knights against Final Four second-placer Philippine Christian University, while a defeat will send them against top-seed Perpetual Help.

Perpetual Help and PCU enjoy a twice-to-beat advantage in the semifinals.

The Stags defeated the Knights in the first round, 72-68, in a game Letran's ace shooting guard Ronjay Enrile sat out due to a one-game suspension. Jasmine W. Payo

RING-ING A THREAT: The Barangay Ginebra Gin Kings, led by coach Siot Tanquingcen (third from right) and team manager Allan Caidic (right), show off the championship rings they won for putting away the PBA Gran Matador Fiesta Cup during a recent team party. The country's most popular ballclub hopes to re-sign all its players as it gears for the PBA All-Filipino Conference this October.

FedEx keeps Omanzie; Kings foil Shell plan

By June Navarro

OMANZIE Rodriguez, one of the Philippine Basketball Association's tallest cagers, is not going anywhere.

The FedEx Express silenced talks of any trade involving Rodriguez after resigning the 6-foot-7 shotblocker to a three-and-a-half year deal worth P10.6 million over the weekend.

As this developed, Shell coach Leo Austria virtually gave up hope of getting Ginebra center-forward Romel Adducul through a trade when it became apparent that the Fiesta Conference champions Gin Kings were bent on keeping the many-time national team standout.

Rodriguez, a former Mapua Cardinal who had brief stints with the now-defunct Metropolitan Basketball Association's San Juan Knights, stands to earn P225,000 a month in the first year of the contract that ends on July 2008. Rodriguez will get P250,000 the following year before completing his contract with a P275,000-monthly check.

Player agent Ed Ponceja said a couple of teams had shown interest in Rodriguez but Omanzie decided to stay with the Bert Lina-owned ballclub.

"I'm deeply flattered by the interest expressed by other teams but FedEx had an offer which was hard to refuse. I'm looking forward to improving my craft and helping the team get better this year," said Rodriguez in Filipino.

Shell has been trying to acquire Adducul to beef up its thin frontline, but Austria was already informed that Ginebra intends to keep the 6-foot-6 banger.

Ponceja also said that Don Camaso has agreed to a fresh two-and-a-half-year deal with the Talk 'N Text Phone Pals, a month after the Alaska Aces released the 6-foot-6 versatile forward. He added that Coca-Cola's Leo Avenido, Aris Dimaunahan of Barangay Ginebra and San Miguel's Rysal Castro are bound to get an automatic six-month extension from their ballclubs as soon as their contracts expire at year's end.

Dondon Hontiveros, Dorian Peña, Nic Belasco and Dale Singson are also set to renew their ties with the Beermen up to July 2005.

Meanwhile, BJ Manalo has trained his sights on the PBA with the former Ateneo and La Salle alum now joining San Miguel Beer's practice sessions.

SPECTATOR

Al S. Mendoza

WE offered cash incentives to our 16 Olympians because we knew any medal won in Athens would be cause for national celebration. A gold medal alone was worth at least P8 million, a silver P5 million and a bronze P3 million.

The Olympiad is Mt. Everest to mountain climbers, the Oscar to movie stars, the Pope's throne to every priest.

Why no Filipino won a medal in Athens is proof once more of the enormity of the task one has to consider when sent to the Olympics. It is like sending Lito Lapid to the UN to argue with Kofi Anan over America's continued presence in Iraq. Mismatch.

Thus, why we fret over our failure, again, to win an Olympic medal is what pisses me off. The way I got pissed off when we kept on harping over our failure to land a medal right after the 2000 Sydney Olympics.

If the Olympics were that easy, a walk in the park so to speak, then there would have been no need for those megabuck incentives.

We never reward the average, life's ordinariness, or that'd be bestowing, in effect, honors on mediocrity. The Palanca Awards lives on because it is the country's equivalent of the Nobel Prize for Literature.

To me, all Olympic-bound Filipino athletes, the boxers included, are up against the greatest of odds. Almost, they are all doomed to fail. Anyone taking home a medal can be considered the recipient of pure luck, a spark of brilliance here and a speck of guts there.

Why reward someone who is almost expected to win before he could even join the contest?

The US Team in Olympic basketball was not even dangled a single dollar as a reward for winning the gold. Why, because it was supposed to win. Again. When it failed, there was a ton of explanation for that. What stood out, though, was the individualism espoused and practiced to the hilt by the NBA stars in the team. And for that, the team got roasted not only by the world media but also by the entire American press.

Australian Ian Thorpe was the Olympiad's star swimmer again even as American Michael Phelps swam for a record eight medals. Did each of them receive money incentives? No. They had been expected to win, that's why.

As always, athletes from First World countries like Thorpe and Phelps are not only driven to win, they are also obsessed with breaking records. The rewards they get after achieving their aim? Personal glory. Alas, that cannot be said of the members of the US Basketball Team: They played with their NBA career in their minds, the glitter of cash in their dunks more than the glory of their country.

Of course, our 16 Olympians also had flag and country in mind when they did battle in Athens. It was as evident as FPJ wanting to become our president despite overwhelming odds.

Our 16 athletes lost, all right, but that does not mean that in defeat, they no longer deserve applause. No. In fact, we ought to praise them too like winners. I'm not being romantic here; I hate romanticism.

Had they lost because they quit, or surrendered, in the face of hardship or unabated punishment, they deserve nothing but a resounding boo. But no. Each one of them had fought to the end. The three taekwondo jins deserve special mention, particularly Mary Antoinette Rivero, 16, and Donald Geisler III, 25. Both endured pain—Rivero had lumps and bruises all over going to her third fight, Geisler had a grievous ankle injury—just to prove they'd die fighting for a medal.

In a way, they also won, all 16 of them. By being in Athens alone, why that's already a victory, in more ways than one.

Sometimes, it's not just the medal. At times, it's the mental. You think, honestly believe, of having given it your best shot, you are a winner already.

FASTBREAK. Condolences to the loved ones of Antonio Herrera Sr., the Electrobus founder, who passed away recently. His son, Tony Junior, is a well-loved sportsman whose generosity to athletes, mostly the golfers, has now become legend. May the soul of Tony Junior's father, with the merciful God's blessings, rest in peace.

Burlington backs RP Youth anew

IT'S ON to the 18th Asian Basketball Confederation (ABC) junior men's championship for the Philippine Youth squad.

This became a certainty yesterday after Burlington socks, the RP Youth's major backer the past few years, reaffirmed its commitment to support the team in the tournament set in Bangalore, India, from Sept. 14-23.

"Our company is always ready to help for flag and country," said Pete Tan and Ruddy Tan, president and general manager, respectively, of Burlington Industries Phils. Inc., the country's leading hosiery firm.

The RP Youths earned a slot to the biennial tournament by topping the Southeast Asia Basketball Association junior men's championship held in Lucena City last April.

Problem is, only a few from that victorious squad will be available for the tournament limited to players who are 18 years and under. Reason: The tournament coincided with the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the University Athletic Association of the Philippines, where most of the RP Youths are seeing action.

Only four, none of them a starter, are still available from the Johnny Tam-mentored team which swept the Seaba tourney in Lucena. The Tans know that, of course, but they aren't really concerned about a likely lowly finish.

What they want is to honor Burlington's commitment to the nation, the players, the Basketball Association of the Philippines and, of course, the organizers of the ABC junior men's championship.

Burlington has even developed a new line of socks, Shock XT, for the RP Youths, other athletes and active people to help reach one's potential.

Serena turns heads with stunning outfit

WILLIAMS

NEW YORK—This is all you need to know about Serena Williams' concerns at the US Open:

After warming up for what would be a 6-4, 6-3 second-round victory Wednesday against Lindsay Lee-Waters, Williams approached the chair umpire with an urgent request—could someone get her purse from the locker room? She forgot to put on earrings.

Williams' health and tennis might not have been perfect over the past year, but her fashion sense is just fine, thank you.

"I consider myself an entertainer," she said. "I remember always thinking of myself as a broader picture as opposed to just your normal athlete. I don't think I've ever been your normal athlete. I've always had something different going on in my life."

After rising to No. 1 and winning a self-styled Serena Slam of four straight majors, she had left knee surgery in August 2003, and hasn't been the same since. Williams missed 8 1/2 months, won her first tournament back in March—but owns zero titles since and her ranking slid to 11th.

Williams made her Open debut Monday night in a short, pleated denim skirt. On Wednesday, she wore black hot pants and a navel-ring revealing, studded tight tank top. While the stadium loudspeakers blared the 1970s song "You Sexy Thing," she warmed up in black, knee-high faux boots along with a black zip-up jacket with "SERENA" in sequins on the back—even though the temperature topped 75 degrees Fahrenheit (23.89 degrees Celsius).

Not exactly what Tennis Moms might do for their outings on public courts. Even Williams said: "If I'm slightly uncomfortable, that's OK. I'm usually able to play through it."

She added: "I represent all females out there who believe in themselves. It doesn't matter what you look like; it's all about having confidence." AP

Alonzo ready after kidney transplant

EAST RUTHERFORD, New Jersey—Alonzo Mourning will try to revive his career with the New Jersey Nets after a kidney transplant but guard Jason Kidd may be sidelined until December because of a knee injury, it was announced here Wednesday.

Mourning, a seven-time All-Star center, will take part in the Nets 2004-05 training camp in a comeback bid, said Nets chief executive Rod Thorn.

"We look forward to Alonzo joining the Nets in training camp," he said. "Hopefully he will be able to resume his career and play at the high level he has in the past."

Mourning, 34, suffered renal failure last November and was forced to leave the game to undergo a kidney transplant. He had played in 12 games with the Nets, averaging 8.0 points and 2.3 rebounds.

He believes he has recovered enough to contribute to the Nets this season.

"I am feeling great and am excited about attending training camp and possibly resuming my career," he said.

According to a report in the New York Post, Kidd, 31, may not play until December following left knee surgery he underwent two months ago.

Kidd, who completed his third season with the Nets, missed 15 games with a bone bruise and sore left knee.

He averaged 15.5 points, 6.4 rebounds and 9.2 assists in 67 games last season. AFP

NEW YORK—At their peaks, Jennifer Capriati and Lleyton Hewitt attracted all sorts of attention at every tournament. At this US Open, they're almost an afterthought.

That's fine for the former No. 1 players and Grand Slam champions, especially while they're winning.

With Serena Williams' outfits, Maria Shara-pova's aura, Lindsay Davenport's 18-match winning streak, and Justine Henin-Hardenne's title defense, Capriati hasn't gotten a lot of notice.

Same for Hewitt, mostly overlooked amid all the fuss about Andre Agassi, Andy Roddick and Roger Federer.

The fourth-seeded Australian Hewitt won his first-round match Wednesday, defeating Wayne Ferreira of South Africa, 6-1, 7-5, 6-4.

Mila calls for reconciliation

METROPOLITAN Chess Club president Mila Emperado yesterday appealed for peace and reconciliation in the wake of attempts to discredit the recent National Chess Federation of the Philippines election. "Let's put an end to all the bickering and infighting which only hurt the game that we all love," said Emperado, one of the eight new directors elected to the 15-man board. Emperado is one of the respondents in the suit filed by former treasurer Constantino Marcalde before the Regional Trial Court in Quezon City. "The issue of whether the election is legal or not is now in the hands of the court. The least we could do is to wait for the decision," said Emperado, who founded MCC in 1988 and started Checkmate. Emperado denied that the recent NCFP polls were rigged. "I did not wait for 10 hours just to be part of a sham exercise," she said.

BADMINTON courts and facilities in Metro Manila and selected cities nationwide are slated to see action in the first National Inter-Club Platinum Cup starting next month.

Presented by Globe Platinum, the event organized by INQUIRER Badminton (IB) promises to be one of the year's most exciting tournaments as 60 partner courts of INQUIRER Badminton have been invited to participate.

Partner courts will be divided into five areas: North (Quezon City), Central (Mandaluyong, San Juan, Makati), West (Caloocan, Valenzuela, Malabon, Manila), East (Pasig, Marikina, Rizal) and South (Muntinlupa, Alabang, Las Piñas, Parañaque and Taguig). Provincial teams will have a separate division.

Clubs located in the areas mentioned will go through a series of weekend eliminations with the top teams per area advancing to the national finals of the event that has also drawn the support of Mizuno through its local distributor, Master Sports Inc., on Nov. 19-21.

The West area eliminations will be held on Oct. 2-3, East Oct. 9-10, South Oct. 16-17, Central Oct. 23-24 and North on Oct. 30-31.

Each club will be asked to send in a team for the following categories: men's doubles, women's doubles and mixed doubles. Matches will be a best-of-three affair.

Eligibility rules require players to be a Filipino citizen, a member or regular player of the participating partner court and a bona fide employee of a reputable company. He or she must not have played for any national team, is not currently playing for a collegiate team and not a coach or trainer.

Aside from the regular updates in the INQUIRER broadsheet and IB, details of the Inter-Club will also be posted in the electronic version of the magazine to be launched soon.

The organizers are leaving the selection process for the partner courts' representatives for the area eliminations to the discretion of their respective managements. For inquiries, call the INQUIRER Badminton office at 8978808 locals 259 or 261. Look for Ching dela Cruz.

Bata, 50, still the sports fans' favorite (FAREWELL TO A DEARLY DEPARTED.) I extend my deepest sympathies to the family of my sister, Chuchie Hermoso, whose loving husband, Vicente Hermoso Jr., died on Wednesday morning of cardiac arrest at the Asian Hospital. At the time of his death, Jun Hermoso was president of the Meycauayan College, one of the oldest and leading schools in Bulacan. A much-admired Rotarian, civic leader and philanthropist, Jun passed away at age 67. His remains lie at the Meycauayan church. Interment will be on Sunday morning after the 8 a.m. Mass).

DURABLE Efrén "Bata" Reyes, who turned 50 last Aug. 26, may be old as an athlete, but he is still good for some more years, says his longtime manager, Rollice Vicente.

"Efrén is good for five more years. Hindi pa siya laos (He is not yet a washed-up player)," said Vicente of the Puyat Sports Team after Reyes beat reigning world pool champion Alex Pagulayan, 13-12, Tuesday in the nail-biting finals of "On Cue 3: Continental Conquest" held before a capacity crowd of mostly pro-Bata fans at the Trade Hall of the Robinsons Galleria.

The victory, worth $20,000 (P1.1 million), proved that Hall of Famer Reyes is not yet over the hill, that his best years are well behind him. The victory also underscored a banner year for the unassuming Reyes, who had earlier dominated the five-leg San Miguel Beer Asian 9-Ball Tour and the 6th Annual Derby City Classic in Louisville, Kentucky, where 303 world-class players participated.

CLEAN LIVING

Manolo R. Inigo

Now that Reyes has consistently proven that he is still a force to reckon with at the pool table, it would do well for officials of the Billiards and Snooker Congress of the Philippines headed by president Ernesto Pajardo to name Reyes to the national team that will compete in the Southeast Asian Games which the country will be hosting next year.

Billiards leaders should also include in the national team Pagulayan, a Canadian citizen who recently reacquired Filipino citizenship, and last year's world No. 1 player Francisco "Django" Bustamante, an "On Cue 3" semifinalist, to help boost our medal chances in the 2005 SEA Games. Their forbidding presence in the Philippine team will surely make the opposition tremble in fear, boosting the country's all-out campaign to win the SEA Games overall championship.

"I want the Philippines to be No. 1 again in Southeast Asia," PSC chair Eric Buhain once quoted President Macapagal-Arroyo as saying.

7-stag derby tomorrow

THE 18TH Annual RAY-Showdown 7-Stag Derby will be held tomorrow at the Roligon Mega Cockpit with more than 100 entries. Hosted by Danny Ty, lawyer Romero Yu & Juancho Aguirre with Mimi Itchon as screener, the three-day spectacle is sponsored by Thunderbird Enerstone, Lakpue Drug and Casino Filipino. The screening of stags which started last Aug. 4 swept 150 gamefowl farms wherein 3,638 young roosters were pre-qualified and banded. The 2-stag preliminaries is set to kick off at 5 p.m.

probably ever played," Hewitt said. The three-time Grand Slam winner advanced into the third round by beating a Spanish, 6-0, 6-2. It was an easy match, as expected, in the second round. American Lindsay Lee-Watson had a harder time getting her act together. Before the match, she appeared nervous and wondered if she could retrieve her purse American Angela Haynes upset 22nd-seeded Magdalena Maleeva of Bulgaria, 6-2, 6-3, to reach the third round.

Second-seeded Frenchwoman Amelie Mauresmo, the Olympic silver medalist, hung in to beat 105th-ranked Julia Vakulenko of Ukraine, 3-6, 6-2, 6-2.

The top-seeded Federer rolled into the third round with a 6-2, 6-7 (4), 6-3, 6-1 victory over Marcos Baghdatis of Cyprus. AP

Cine Europa goes for the bigger picture

By Constantino C. Tejero

ONE would think Filipino moviegoers have had a surfeit of world cinema by now, what with a series of film festivals spread over June and July. But what do you know, at this time of the year, more film fests are coming, ongoing, or just concluded.

The Cultural Center of the Philippines presented two weeks ago the Pride International Film Festival, featuring a bursting cornucopia of gay, lesbian and transgender films.

Ongoing until December is the Italian Film Festival, with one film a month screened on a Tuesday at the CCP Dream Theater. Don't miss Antonioni's "Red Desert" on Sept. 7; Rossellini's "Paisan," Oct. 12; the Taviani's "Padre Padrone," Nov. 9.

Over at SM Megamall, in Cinema 6, the Goethe Institute just concluded a film fest called "Movies Live," featuring those rarest of rare gems: Fritz Lang's "Metropolis"; and FW. Murnau's "Faust—A German Folk Tale," "The Last Laugh" and "Nosferatu, A Symphony of Horror."

These are classics of the silent cinema, masterpieces of German Expressionism. The screenings were accompanied by live scoring performed by some of our more progressive musicians.

And then there is, of course, Cine Europa, the annual festival of contemporary art films from the European Union.

One of the most anticipated film events in the country, this used to be held in October. Now that it is handled by the Mowelfund Film Institute, it is expanding and the films will be shown in the provinces, so it has to be held earlier.

SHOW TIME

The 7th Cine Europa formally opened yesterday at The Podium with a simultaneous launch at SM Megamall. At the opening, Dutch Ambassador Robert Vornis, president of the European Union in the Philippines, and Ambassador Jan de Kok, head of the delegation of the European Commission to the Philippines, gave some remarks.

More entries

This year's festival theme is "The Bigger Picture," referring to the bigger number of entries, 14 in all; the provincial outreach and the subsequent bigger audiences; and the addition of the Czech Republic to the membership.

The Czech entry, Jan Hřebejk's "Divided We Fall," had been premiered in the country two years ago, during the Cinemanila International Film Festival. It was nominated for Best Foreign-Language Film at the 2001 Academy Awards.

Another Oscar nominee that had also been shown here, specifically at the Instituto Cervantes last year, is the Spanish entry, Fernando León de Aranoa's "Los Lunes al sol" (Mondays in the Sun). A second watching of these films would more likely increase one's appreciation.

"SEA OF SILENCE," Belgium

A film that particularly arouses our interest is the Belgian entry "Sea of Silence," since its director Stijn Coninx is the same who made one of our favorites, "Daens." Aware of the exceptional quality of the films coming from this tiny country, we are all the more breathless with anticipation.

But we are always breathless when face to face with excellence. And we assume the rest of the entries to be just as outstanding: Austria's "On the Other Side of the Bridge," by Hu Mei; Belgium's "Hop," by Dominique Standaert; Finland's "Upswing," by Johanna Vuoksenmaa, and "Me and Morrison," by Lenka Hellstedt; France's "Les choristes" (A Real Choirmaster), by Christophe Barratier; Germany's "Distant Lights," by Hans-Christian Schmid; Italy's "Il posto dell'anima" (The Soul's Place), by Riccardo Milani; the Netherlands' "The Black Meteor," by Guido Pieters; Portugal's "Sweet Nightmare," by Fernando Fragata; Sweden's "Deadline," and the United Kingdom's "Young Adam,"

"DIVIDED WE FALL," Czech Republic

by David Mackenzie.

More venues

During the presentation of the films to the press at the Alliance Française de Manille, Mowelfund director and film historian Nick Deocampo pointed out that long before Hollywood invaded the country the Francophone culture had arrived on our shores.

"As early as 1897, Lumière shorts were being shown on Escolta," revealed Deocampo. "Some Spanish entrepreneurs were the first to bring the Pathé films to the country. Well, of course, Méliès' made 'Bataille de Manille.'"

With that, Deocampo was confirming the little-known fact that Europeans, particularly the French, Spanish and British, introduced in the country "the first film technologies that later shaped the local film industry."

Cine Europa is ongoing until Sept. 12 at SM Megamall; then goes to SM Cebu on Sept. 16-18; and to SM Baguio on Sept. 24-26. The organizers hope it will cover more urban centers in future editions.

Some years ago, on its early edition, we were hoping organizers of this festival would extend the screenings to the provinces as it was there where people needed these films more, since they were relatively more accessible to Metro Manila residents, anyway. Now it's happening.

Here's to a more vibrant film culture in the country.

And here's to a more film-literate people, who can readily recognize trashy movies and reject them, even if they're upscale trash.

Roño's 'Feng Shui' to be shown in US, Hong Kong

STAR Cinema's "Feng Shui" the horror-drama directed by Chito Roño from a screenplay by Roy Iglesias, will be shown in an international premiere at the Golf Glen Theater in Chicago on Sept. 18, three days after it opens in the Philippines.

The movie's stars, led by Kris Aquino and Jay Manalo, may grace the US screening which will also include Los Angeles and Daly City in California, as well as Honolulu and Maui in Hawaii, and in Guam.

"Feng Shui" will also be shown in Saipan and Hong Kong.

"Feng Shui" is the story of a couple (Kris and Jay) who is blessed with good fortune after the wife finds a mysterious mirror, called ba-gua by the Chinese, left behind by a stranger.

It turns out the mirror brings not just good fortune but also bad fortune, as the couple learns too late.

"Feng Shui" is Kris' first horror-drama starrer.

It also stars Lotlot de Leon, Ilonah Jean and Jenny Miller.

Lav Diaz's 10-hour film screens in Toronto

By Marinel R. Cruz

AWARD-WINNING independent filmmaker Lav Diaz's 10-hour opus "Ebolusyon ng Isang Pamilyang Pilipino" is the lone Philippine representative to the weeklong 2004 Toronto International Film Festival in Canada this month.

Diaz will fly to Canada on Sept. 15, in time for the screening of "Ebolusyon" on Sept. 17 and 18.

"Ebolusyon" will be featured in the Visions category along with 19 other films, which include Kevin Spacey's "Beyond the Sea," Zhang Yimou's "House of Flying Daggers," Jean-Paul Salomé's "Arsène Lupin," and Carlo

Mazzacurati's "An Italian Romance."

"Visions focuses on the innovative," according to the Toronto Film Fest website (www.bell.ca/filmfest). "It spotlights work that enters new cinematic territory, uses unusual approaches to storytelling, or employs new technologies in distinctive ways."

"Visions is an exciting new program featuring international filmmakers pushing the boundaries of contemporary cinema," the website added.

According to Diaz, his production outfit, SineOlivia, received a formal invitation from the Toronto film fest organizer, Steve Gravestock, last month.

"Gravestock went to my studio in Cubao to watch the rough draft (of 'Ebolusyon')," Diaz told INQUIRER Entertainment in a telephone interview last Monday. "I guess he liked what he saw because I got the invitation a month later."

'I assure you, I'll finish this in time for the film fest'

The film's "rough draft" is eight hours long, said Diaz. But the "restructured version for Toronto" will run for nine hours and 40 minutes, he added.

Diaz said "Ebolusyon" is now 10 hours long. He only has a VHS copy of the movie because his computer crashed a month before his new movie was to have its Philippine premiere at the Makati Cinemanila International Film Festival last July.

"I assure you, we'll finish this in time for the film fest," Diaz told INQUIRER Entertainment. "I'll hand-carry it myself."

In a previous interview, Diaz described "Ebolusyon ng Isang Pamilyang Pilipino" as about a family trying to save itself and solve its little problems. The movie also deals with the family dysfunctions caused by poverty, he said.

The director said "Ebolusyon" was first shot in New York on March 8, 1994. "It's been a decade," he said. "We've shot scenes in Virginia, Maryland, and other parts of the US, although you won't see them in the final version anymore. We shot some scenes in Antipolo, Rizal, five days ago."

"Ebolusyon" was the last film actor Rey Ventura made before he died in 2001, said Diaz.

"A lot of people sacrificed for this film," he said. "Many volunteered their help, especially people from the theater and from Mowelfund (Movie Workers Welfare Foundation). We really struggled. We only shoot when we have money to shoot."

Diaz's award-winning five-hour masterpiece, "Batang West Side," also shot in the US, is continuously doing the rounds of international film fests.

"Being recognized internationally is good for the local independent cinema," he said. "I believe that we should all work hard for this."

He said "Ebolusyon" would also be featured at the Singapore film fest early next year. The Berlin and Rotterdam festivals have shown interest in including the movie in their short-lists, he said.

"Ebolusyon" is a production of SineOlivia and Paul Tañedo Inc.

The ex-child superstar who brought a studio back from the ashes

By Nini Valera

THE FORMER child star, who had a horde of fans during her reign in the '50s, is now a big fan herself.

"Now, I am the biggest fan of Filipino stars," says Tessie Agana. "I have The Filipino Channel at home, and it's on all the time. Every time my children would ask me what was going on in Philippine show biz, I could tell them what's happening. Just hearing all this news about the stars gets me excited."

Agana, a superstar before the term was invented, now says she would rather forget her life as a child star in the '50s. "That is history now," she says. "It's funny that when I tell my kids how famous I was, they couldn't figure out how that could be. Like, 'Hey, is this really my mom?'"

Haunting memory

The sight of a child losing her finger while trying to get near her has haunted the former child actress.

Agana, now 61 and who now refers to herself as a "plain housewife, mother of nine children and grandmother of two," recalls the incident as vividly as if it happened yesterday.

"I'll never forget this," she begins. "We had a personal appearance in a province, and all the kids and people were there. It was so scary. I was being pinched and all that. We were inside a hotel room and they tried to get in. Other people were protecting us and they closed the door. One of the kids—her finger was severed. I was so scared. But all I could do was cry."

She remembers the child being brought to a hospital, but doesn't know what happened to her.

When her family returned from the US to the Philippines for a visit in the '80s and saw parts of "Roberta," the movie that made Agana a big star, she had to translate the dialogue for her children.

"They couldn't understand it," she says.

In the collective memories of diehard movie fans, the tearjerker "Roberta" lives on as monumental movie that turned the curly-haired child into a celluloid giant.

5-year-old actress

To Sampaguita Pictures matriarch Nena Vera-Perez, Agana was a child who did wonders for the studio and the industry.

"She was only 5 years old when we tried her out for the movies," says Mrs. Vera-Perez. "Her mother, Consuelo Agana (also a former actress known as Linda Estrella), is my first cousin. We were neighbors, and we would be together all the time."

"The Doctor (the late Jose A. Perez) saw that Tessie could cry very well. So he tried her out in a movie with Pancho Magalona. She then appeared in two movies."

Agana's version of how she was discovered for the movies is more matter of fact.

"I guess they saw me and tried me out for a movie," she says. "That's all I know because I was still young then. Fortunately, the movie did well."

When the Sampaguita Pictures studios burned down in 1951, the Vera-Perezes wanted to close shop. But their contract stars prevailed on them to save the company and offered their services for free.

"At that time, we were looking at the komiks novel 'Roberta' by Mars Ravelo," says Mrs. Vera-Perez.

Always a pro

The movie based on the komiks novel, directed by Olive La Torre, was filmed on a super-tight budget. But it went on to be a blockbuster during its one-week run at the Life Theater in downtown Manila.

"At that time, the other producers and I had an agreement that even if a movie was making good, it would only be shown a week at Life or Dalisay theater," explains Mrs. Vera-Perez. "'Roberta' broke all the existing records at that time. It helped us get back on our feet."

Until she was 11, Agana starred in movies

Agot complete without a baby

By Leah C. Salterio Contributor

AGOT Isidro gave up show business for two years, had surgery, and she and her husband Manu Sandejas danced on the street, all so that they would have a baby.

Agot and Manu remain childless after four years of marriage.

The pitter-patter of dainty little feet, a baby's gurgling laughter, a baby's cooing, even its cries: They seem so ordinary and they're taken for granted, but for Agot, they're only a dream, so far. She has been wishing and hoping and praying to hear and to have and to hold her very own baby.

Agot says she has decided to leave it all up to God. Her husband has told her, "We're still complete."

"I gave up show biz by choice, not because Manu wanted me to," Agot, 38, shares. "He never imposes on me. I'm the one who really wants to have a baby because I'm not getting any younger."

Getting pregnant, however, turned out to be a very complicated matter for Agot. First, she discovered she had a retroverted uterus, "although it's not very uncommon to women," she says. Then doctors suggested she take hormonal shots. She did.

Agot and Manu, an advertising man, even went to Obando, Bulacan, and danced on the street with other childless couples. Street-dancing in Obando is said to be an effective way of asking the heavens for children. "You can ask the people there because they saw us," says Agot.

Complete

In 2002, Agot found out she had a benign myoma in her uterus. Doctors took it out by performing a Caesarian operation on her.

"After that, I was so depressed," Agot says. "I went through the whole process of giving birth, except that there was no baby. When I was in surgery, my husband was my rock and my anchor. He wrote me a letter and gave it to me after my operation. He said, 'Having a baby is a blessing. For people like us, it's a bonus. But if it doesn't happen, we're still complete. We don't need another person to complete us.'

"My husband probably felt we had done enough trying to have a baby. We've consulted three doctors already. Some of our friends suggested we try in vitro or artificial fertilization, which costs $20,000, but we didn't want to do it. It's not in the normal order of things."

Agot says she and Manu have learned to accept that a baby is what they probably could not have. "Today, there's no pressure on us anymore to have a baby," she says. "We just want to enjoy each other. We've become closer. We're prepared to lead a life with only the two of us together. That's fine."

"Manu and I accept, and we're happy. I guess that's more important."

No anger

She makes it clear, however, that acceptance does not mean giving up for good.

"We've made a paradigm shift in our lives. But it doesn't mean we've given up on having a baby. After hearing Sunday Mass at St. James Church in Ayala Alabang, we stay for a few more minutes just to pray. Maybe this is not yet the time to have a baby. If it's God's will, He will give it to us. But we will no longer go through what we went through in trying to have a baby."

Agot says not having a baby is not a reason for her to be angry at God. Her strong faith in God has pulled her out of the depths of depression and kept her going.

"There's really a God," she declares. "I'm not even angry at myself. I used to get irritated when people asked me when I would have a baby. I guess they got tired of asking. I always tell them, 'Ayaw pa ni Lord.' How can they argue with that?"

Adoption is not an option for Manu and Agot. "We don't talk about it," Agot says. "Some people are worried about us and I get so uncomfortable with that. I assure you I no longer feel any longing for a baby, even when I attend baptisms or children's parties."

Theater neophyte

Fortunately, Agot has found therapy to overcome depression: work. Last year, she was in a musical for Trumpets, "Honk." Early this year, she took on the role of a lawyer-mermaid in ABS-CBN's fantasy-drama series, "Marina," starring Claudine Barretto. And when Atlantis Productions offered her to star with Lea Salonga in the musical "Baby," Agot did not pass it up.

Ironically, in "Baby" she plays the role of a gym teacher who tries everything just so she will have a baby. Her character is married to a basketball coach played by Jett Pangan.

The musical is directed by Bobby Garcia and runs until Sept. 5 at the Meralco Theater.

"My role in 'Baby' is so true for me," Agot offers. "In our earlier rehearsals, I would cry. But I accepted this musical because it's a challenge. I'm the theater neophyte in the cast, compared with Lea Salonga and Menchu Lauchengco-Yulo."

"I love everything I'm doing now," she adds. "What happened to me was really a big awakening. I've realized that you cannot plan your life. I thought it was so easy to have a baby. I made the right choice by leaving everything up to God."

Agot says she and Manu are happy just having each other. God may yet decide that they deserve to have more happiness.

like "Prinsesa at Pulubi," "Rebecca," "Querubim," "Tulisang Pugot," among others.

She was always a pro, according to Mrs. Vera-Perez.

"When she was about to do a take, we'd ask her what she wanted us to give her," she says. "She always came back with, 'I want fried chicken.' We'd give her that all the time."

The request for fried chicken was always granted did not escape the notice of Marichu Vera-Perez, eldest daughter of the movie mogul Dr. Perez.

"She (Marichu) would always ask me, 'Ma, why is she always given fried chicken and I'm not,' relates Mrs. Vera-Perez. "Tessie and Ichu were always together because they were the same age. Ichu would always complain about the fried chicken. So I'd explain to her that she wouldn't get fried chicken because she did not appear in our movies."

The young Tessie Agana was paid a salary, which her doctor father, the late Adriano Agana, deposited in a bank account for her, according to Mrs. Vera-Perez.

Tears on cue

Like most child actors, Agana threw tantrums on the set.

"Of course, I had tantrums," she admits now. "But I never held up production."

She did not memorize her lines, "but they would tell me what I should say and then I'd do it."

She was also very good at crying at the drop of a hat.

"Her tears would just fall as if on cue," recalls Mrs. Vera-Perez. "After a take, she would ask, 'Can I play?' Then she would take off and play with Marichu. But when we called her, she would come immediately. She was very cooperative."

"She looked so pitiful when she cried. But after a crying scene, she would come up to us, and ask, 'Can I eat fried chicken?' She was just a child after all."

But nothing was normal for Tessie Agana the child star.

"Although I did not have any idea that I was that big in the movies, and I thought I was just playing, I guess I did not have a normal life," she says.

Three languages

For her to have a normal life, "my parents decided that we should migrate to the US."

She finished college at the De Paul University in Indiana where she took up foreign languages.

"I could speak three languages before," she says, "but unfortunately, if you don't speak it regularly, you lose track."

When Agana turned 18, Dr. Vera-Perez pre-

"ROBERTA," played by Agana (background, with the late Boy Alano), with the late Van de Leon and "victim" Bella Flores vailed on her to return to the Philippines to celebrate her coming of age with a party. A comeback movie was also in order for the former child star. In her case, it was two movies, "Amy, Susie and Tessie" with then celluloid goddesses Amalia Fuentes and Susan Rocas, and "Love at First Sight" with heartthrob Jose Mari.

But the glamour of show business could not lure back Agana, who confesses to being shy and introverted.

"Until now, I'm still very shy," she says. "When Tita Nena (Mrs. Vera-Perez) told me about this interview, I told her, 'I'm already old. I'm no longer in the limelight.'"

"But Tita Nena told me, 'Tessie, when you're here in Manila, you're still known. I guess that's quite an honor.'"

Last dance

In 1962, Agana met Dr. Rodolfo Jao at a function after a medical convention in Chicago, Illinois.

"I went to the party without a date because my date stood me up," Dr. Jao recalls. "Then I saw Tessie. It was her father, my future father-in-law, who introduced me to her."

Even if Agana had a date, Dr. Jao could not be stopped from claiming the last dance with her.

"I didn't want to dance with him then," she says of the man who would be her husband. "I had a date. But somehow, he tricked me into it."

"It was easy to do that," says Dr. Jao. "I was in charge of the function, and after I told the band that the next number would be the last dance, I just grabbed Tessie and took her to the

"Oh, yes, I knew she was 'Roberta,'" he adds. "But that was never part of the attraction. I never expected that this little girl would be my wife."

Exceptions to the rule

PRODUCERS and stars of "bold" movies are dismayed by reports that the SM malls' cinema circuit, with its more than 130 theaters, has decided not to show movies rated R-18.

SM officials explain that they have come to this decision because their malls have a predominantly "family" clientele, so the entertainment they offer should be child-friendly.

In general, the viewing public has welcomed this move, and believes that it will help "clean up" the local film scene, which has been quite sex-oriented of late.

On the other hand, sexy actresses have been appearing on TV to protest SM's decision to exclude their R-18 starrers from its list of film attractions.

They complain that, since the SM chain has so many theaters, the exclusion of their bold movies will result in a drastic loss of income for their films' producers.

And, in time, this will discourage financiers to bankroll sexy projects, thus reducing the actresses' performing and earning opportunities.

To our mind, however, the bold stars' protests on TV have been counterproductive, because of their strident and occasionally cheap projection.

In future, therefore, they should try harder to get their act together in a more positive way. It definitely isn't useful for them to behave like spoiled and testy brats, because this could turn even their supporters against them.

For our part, we, too, find exploitative and shlocky sexy flicks off-putting. But we must point out that not only sex- and violence-oriented movies can get an R-18 classification from MTRCB.

What if a mature movie is produced about a sensitive topic, like a hot political or ethical issue, or about a protagonist who eventually rises above a really evil past, and that production were given an R-18 classification? Would that mean that it, too, would not be screened on the SM cinema circuit?

What if the movie were really substantial, thought-provoking and relevant? Despite its controversial and perhaps even shocking elements, it would deserve to be seen by adult viewers.

We suggest, therefore, that SM's new rule should allow for deserving exceptions, significant movies that are clearly not exploitative and demeaning. Otherwise, many of our adult viewers would be deprived of the opportunity to be exposed to challenging, provocative fare.

Sure, the films could be shown outside the SM circuit, but SM has so many theaters that exclusion from its numerous screens would be a major loss. It could discourage producers from bankrolling all projects that could get an R-18 classification—and that would be a great pity.

One-actor plays

TANGHALANG Ateneo is staging back-to-back one-actor plays, "Re-Isyu: Linya and Santuario," from Sept. 3 to 11 at the Ateneo's Fine Arts Studio Theater. The plays are written and directed by Yan Yrastorza Yuson. Call 984-1042.

"Linya" is about people whose main mission in life is to travel, or else lose all meaning in their lives. "Santuario" looks at life inside a mental institution, and makes viewers rethink what it really means to be insane.

PPO season

THE CCP's Philippine Philharmonic Orchestra has lined up an exciting season under its new music director and principal conductor, Eugene Castillo.

The season opener on Sept. 10, "Coming Home," is highlighted by the Philippine premiere of Angel Peña's "Trinity, A Symphonic Cycle," and the performance of soprano Camille Lopez-Molina in Samuel Barbers' "Knoxville: Summer of 1915" (text by James Agee).

Other pieces: Brahms' "Symphony No. 4 in E minor," which begins a four-year annual cycle of the composer's symphonies, and Barbers' "Adagio for Strings from op. 11."

On Oct. 8, Chinese-American violinist Linda Wang performs in Leonard Bernstein's "Serenade: After Plato's Symposium" for violin and orchestra.

The concert, titled "Windows of Time," looks back to the two world wars of the 20th century: Bohuslav Sibelius' "Memorial to Ludice" is on the annihilation of the Czech village, while Jean Sibelius' "Symphony No. 5 in E flat major, op. 82" is a piece the composer wrote as bombs fell on Helsinki. (Other PPO 21st season concerts detailed tomorrow.)

BAUTISTA. "The Way You Look at Me —The Repeat"

Christian repeats solo concert

CHRISTIAN Bautista will repeat his first major solo concert after a standing-ovation reception from an SRO crowd last month.

Christian's concert, "The Way You Look at Me—The Repeat," returns to the Music Museum on Sept. 11 at 9 p.m.

One of the brightest of today's rising stars, Christian already has two consecutive hits: the chart-topping "The Way You Look at Me" and "Hands to Heaven." His debut album turned platinum after only four months.

His handsome face graces TV, billboards and print advertisements. His official website gets 1,000 visits a day. His official fan club, Christian Friends, is growing fast.

He is set to go on a US tour, perform in a string of other shows, and will appear in a daily soap very soon.

Christian's success story is one for a "Maalaala Mo Kaya" episode. The tall, dark and handsome baritone first gained prominence as one of the first finalists of ABS-CBN's "Star In A Million," where he was the TV viewers' favorite.

Warner Philippines executive Ricky Ilacad, who had followed the singing contest from day one, immediately got in touch with Christian's managers, Carlo Orosa and Audie Gemora, to offer a recording deal.

"I didn't even have the time to feel sad about losing in 'Star in a Million' because the Warner offer came the day after," says Christian. "The Warner people were having their Christmas party that evening and I was invited. I was asked to sing a Josh Groban song extemporaneously, which didn't really throw me off. What surprised me was when Sir Ricky got up on stage and introduced me as Warner's 'next big star'."

"The next thing I knew, I was in a recording studio rushing an album that was to be released in two months!"

naman,' and then she ate a little."

Villegas said Dely collapsed in her arms on Monday night.

"We tried to revive her," she said. "But I know we had lost her in the taxi cab on our way to the hospital."

Dely was declared dead on arrival at the Parañaque Medical Hospital Monday night.

Good memories

"Nanay was a good friend to me," said Villegas. "She was a kind person and was always willing to help others. I've lots of good memories of Nanay, but thinking about those memories make me cry."

Villegas said her grandmother was blessed with kind-hearted friends, like Dolphy and actor-TV host Vic Sotto, who both gave financial assistance for Dely's burial.

"We're very thankful for all their help," said Villegas. "They have always been there to take care of Nanay's needs."

Dely's burial is tentatively set Sunday, Sept. 5, in Parañaque City.

She also left behind sister Lulu Molina and granddaughters Aida, Amor, Alma, Armi and Ann Villegas, a former movie actress.

Babysitter

The Jaos now live in Valparaiso, Indiana.

"All my kids are now out of the cop," says the proud mother. "But whenever they need a baby sitter, Mama Tessie is always around."

Their children are Marita, 38; Rodman, 37, a Jesuit priest; Roger, 36, a drug company district manager; Roderick, 35; Michelle, 32; Mylene, 31, a planner in the medical field; Rodolfo Jr., 30; Rodney, 29, who is a part-time actor in Hollywood; and Rodel, 25.

Agana says there is nothing from her past that she would want to have back and re-live again.

"No, I enjoy my life being just plain Tessie Jao," she claims. "It's normal. There's no fuzz."

She tried a career, working as a medical secretary, after her kids had all grown up. "But I quit because I commuted and it was hard to do," she says. "I was also planning to come here with my husband, so I quit."

She can do movies again, she says, "but I have no plans as of now. I love my life as the wife of Dr. Jao and the mother of his children."

Less than a year later, Christian is a certified hitmaker, and arguably the hottest new male singer in the biz. With bookings lined up till February 2005, he now hardly has time for rest and leisure. What free time he has is used for workouts, derma visits, voice/dance lessons and much needed sleep.

"Now I know first-hand what the Bible says about God blessing exceedingly well," gushes the young singer. "I just try my best to honor Him by working hard, and giving my all."

Christian is rehearsing for the repeat of his successful solo concert. Aptly titled "The Way You Look at Me," the show takes a closer look at Christian, his story and his music.

Christian's guests are the R&B group 17:28 and the yet to be discovered singer Rebekah.

"The Way You Look at Me—The Repeat" is slated at the Music Museum on Sept. 11 at 9 p.m. For ticket inquiries, contact MaxiMedia, 551-7777 or Stages, Christian's management group, at 818-1111 loc. 225.

Dely sang, danced on her last birthday

By Marinel R. Cruz

FORMER comedian Dely Atay-atayan had wanted to celebrate her 90th birthday last March with all of her loved ones because she felt it would be her last, according to her granddaughter.

Adelaida Fernandez-Villegas, known to TV viewers as John Puruntong's nagging mother-in-law Dofia Delilah on "John en Marsha" in the 1970s, died of old age last Monday night. She was born on March 17, 1914.

According to Dely's granddaughter, Aida Villegas, the comedian was "very happy" during her birthday celebration at her home in Parañaque City last March 20. Dely, who had not been able to walk since 2002, "sang and danced at her birthday party," Villegas added.

Dreaming of performing

"Nanay really loved singing," Villegas, the eldest of the comedian's four grandchildren, said of Dely, at the comedian's wake at the Holy Trinity Chapel in Sucat, Parañaque last Tuesday night. "She could no longer get up, but she was shaking her body to the music."

In an interview with INQUIRER Entertainment in May 2003, Dely had said that she still dreamed of performing as a singer.

"Singing is my true love," she had said. "It paved the way for me to enter show biz. Though I'm having a hard time recalling the lyrics, I'd gladly sing my favorite songs to anyone who'd ask. I love singing too much to ever get tired of it."

Dely, daughter of painter and composer Amado Fernando and singer Carmen Marquez, started her show biz career as a kundiman singer at the Palace Theater in Sta. Cruz, Manila. She later toured the country with a bodabil troupe from 1930 to 1934.

Villegas said show business was her grandmother's true love. "Her only wish was to never leave show biz, but she lost show biz," said Villegas at Dely's wake. "She really enjoyed doing John en Marsha." I think she started feeling depressed when the sitcom was axed."

WITH Fernando Poe Jr.

On "John en Marsha," TV viewers heard Dofia Delilah say her famous punch line ("Kaya ikaw John, magsumikap ka!") every week for 17 years until 1989. Dely's character was the grandmother of the characters of Maricel Soriano and Rolly Quizon, and mother of the late Nida Blanca's character Marsha.

Last night

Dely had been living in BF Homes in Parañaque City with granddaughter Amor Quizon since 2002. Quizon is the mother of actor and commercial model Boy 2 Quizon. Boy 2's father, Boy, is the son of comedian Dolphy, the son-in-law Dely loved to nag on "John en Marsha."

Boy 2 was at his great-grandmother's wake

FELLOW COMEDIAN Dolphy (left, in a '60s movie) remained a good friend even after their "John en Marsha" days. Behind them is the late Panchito, another comedian.

Tuesday night, but did not grant any interview with the media.

Villegas said that last Aug. 27, she received a call from Quizon, asking her to come over and check on their grandmother. "Nanay had not been eating for three days," said Villegas. "Amor said she was afraid for Nanay, who also refused to talk. When I got there, Nanay said, 'ang tagal mo SHARE prices yesterday closed up 1.33 percent at a three-and-a-half-year high as investors snapped up blue-chips, buoyed by good news on austerity measures adopted by the government to head off a fiscal crisis, dealers said.

They also credited positive news from President Macapagal-Arroyo's state visit to China for the gains.

The Philippine Stock Exchange composite index was up 21.26 points to 1,614.00 after trading between 1,592.74 and 1,614.55. This was the highest closing level since March 5, 2001 when it closed at 1,616.54 points.

Gainers led losers 55 to 25, while 45 stocks were unchanged.

The volume hit 2.7 billion shares worth P643.4 million, up from 1.14 billion shares worth P928.7 million on Wednesday.

The all-shares index rose 6.40 points at 1,031.09, the commercial-industrials gained 46.01 to 2,596.11, property advanced 2.89 to 528.24, mining was up 11.19 to 1,757.02, oil retreated 0.01 to 1.59 and banking and financial services shed 0.45 to 455.99.

"We expected a test of 1,600 points and since that level is now strongly supported, we saw a gradual rise of the market to test the next resistance level of 1,618 points," said Ron Rodrigo of Accord Capital Equities.

"I think the improvement in sentiment was triggered by some positive news from the China visit of the president and her announcement of cost-cutting measures to address the government's budget deficit problems," he added.

Arroyo, who is on a three-day trip to China, has announced the forging of new trade agreements even as she ordered a tighter austerity program for government to prevent a fiscal crisis.

Paul Joseph Garcia, chief investment officer of ING Investment Management Co., said he was looking at 1,620 as the next resistance level. "If we break that, it is possible we may hit 1,750 and 1800 by the end of the year."

Garcia said investors had positioned themselves ahead of better than expected corporate earnings in the third and fourth quarter.

Among the sectors expected to outperform others in the third and fourth quarter are the telecom and utility sectors.

Joseph Roxas, president at Eagle Equities Inc., said top-traded Philippine Long Distance Telephone Co. was among the favorites as its prices stayed within a narrow range for quite some time.

PLDT gained P35 to P1,320

while sister firm Metro Pacific Corp. rose 9 centavos to 44 centavos.

RP, China hope for early OK of free trade deal

BEIJING—President Macapagal-Arroyo and Chinese President Hu Jintao expressed hope on Wednesday for the early establishment of a planned free trade zone linking China and 10 Southeast Asian countries.

Meeting with Arroyo on the first day of her three-day visit to China, Hu said he hoped to speed up negotiations with the Association of Southeast Asian Nations and launch the free-trade pact "on time," state television CCTV said.

Arroyo was quoted by CCTV as saying she believed progress would be made in negotiations, with mutual efforts by China and the Asean, which includes the Philippines.

The planned accord would create the world's biggest free trade zone of nearly two billion people with a combined gross domestic product of $2 trillion by 2010.

Talks had hit a snag with the Southeast Asian countries unable to agree on which products should be included in a basket of goods to be liberalized.

Some of the Asean countries, including the Philippines, were seeking a longer timeframe to bring down tariffs on sensitive farm products.

The impasse threatened to delay an agreement on the chapter covering trade in goods—the first in the negotiations process.

On Wednesday, Hu and Arroyo greeted each other warmly in her first visit since she was re-elected in May.

Calling Arroyo an "old friend of China," Hu praised her for making "very important contributions" to the strengthening of the two countries' ties.

He said Arroyo's choice of China for her first state visit since re-election showed the "great importance" she and her government attached to Sino-Philippines relations.

Hu said the countries should deepen cooperation in agricultural technology, machinery, infrastructure construction and natural resource exploration, according to the Xinhua news agency.

The two sides should also work together to crack down on cross-border crimes more effectively, Hu said.

Arroyo invited Hu to visit the Philippines next year to celebrate the 30th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries, Xinhua said.

The two leaders witnessed the signing of five agreements on visas, fisheries industry cooperation, tourism cooperation, joint marine seismic undertakings and the North Railway project. No details were given.

Some 120 Philippine entrepreneurs accompanied Arroyo to China. The visit is focused mainly on bilateral trade, which surged 78.7 percent year-on-year to $9.4 billion by 2003.

China last year was the Philippines' sixth largest trading partner, sixth largest source of imports and eighth largest export market.

Before arriving in Beijing, Arroyo made a short tour of southern China's Guangzhou city in Guangdong province, where she told Guangdong Governor Huang Huahua she was hoping to promote trade with the province, Xinhua said.

Prior to Arroyo's visit, a Philippines official said Arroyo would also seek to boost security and political cooperation with China, one of the three countries, including Japan and the United States, which the Arroyo administration acknowledges will shape the future of the Asia Pacific region.

However, the official said he did not know whether the thorny issue of the disputed Spratly chain of islands in the South China Sea, would be raised.

Arroyo was scheduled to meet China's military chief Jiang Zemin and Premier Wen Jiabao yesterday. AFP

Puerto Azul loses 110 hectares

THE FINANCIALLY troubled Puerto Azul project has been dealt with another setback.

The Supreme Court on Tuesday ruled that over 109.6 hectares within the sprawling mountainous beach-golf resort and country club in Cavite still belong to the public domain.

The high court's Second Division noted that the application of Trinidad Diaz Enriquez to register the property only covered 6,917 square meters, not 1.096 million sq.m. as what subsequently been approved by then Naic, Cavite Regional Trial Court Judge Emerito Agcaolil.

Enriquez, the matriarch of the Marcos crony family who developed the Mediterranean-style resort in the late '70s, claimed she acquired the disputed land in the Ternate and Maragondon towns in 1975, but had it applied for titling only in 1992.

The government, through the Office of the Solicitor General, opposed the application, and so did the original tillers, who claimed the sale had been fraud through "vitiated consent," before subsequently withdrawing their opposition.

The OSG won the case at the Court of Appeals, which reversed the Naic RTC judgment after the matriarch failed to submit any opposition.

Supreme Court Justice Romeo Callejo Jr., the ponente, ruled that Enriquez had lost her party-in-interest status in the appeal when she sold the same land in

COCKTALES

Victor C. Agustin

September 1994 to his son-in-law, Rebecca Panlilio.

Panlilio, now deceased, turned around and sold it a month later to Puerto Azul Land Inc., the property development company also controlled by the family.

The Supreme Court noted that although Puerto Azul Land claimed that the Enriquezes and their employees had occupied the disputed property since 1945, the company could only show a 1985 tax declaration before the 1992 application for registration.

With the Supreme Court reversal, it is not immediately clear how large a chunk would be lopped off from the entire Puerto Azul project.

One count puts the Puerto Azul Beach Resort at 1,024 hectares. Another estimate, although for the Puerto Azul Golf and Country Club, placed the area at 3,300 hectares.

In her book "Teacher to Tycoon" that chronicles the life and times of her mother, Erlinda Enriquez-Panlilio wrote that the family had acquired about 1,000 hectares of land in the area by 1975.

The Enriquez and Panlilio families also developed what is now the Grand Boulevard Hotel in Roxas Boulevard.

No upgrades

THE GOKONGWEIS have escaped being besieged daily by requests for upgrades from friends and politicians.

How? Their Cebu Pacific simply quietly dropped its business-class section about two months ago.

Introduced when it started flying regional in 2001, the "Cebu Class," as the business section was called, will also no longer be featured even in the new Airbus fleet that the Gokongwei airline will gradually be introducing starting in April.

In other words, Cebu Pacific has decided to return to its original vision, a low-fare, mono-class airline favored by overseas contract workers and budget travelers.

The 12 Airbus 319 that Cebu Pacific has acquired can each be configured for a 124-seat, two-class model.

The Gokongweis will instead stretch the plane's seating capacity to 150, at 30" pitch each.

If you think the leg space is already DVT (deep vein thrombosis)-inducing for Asians, Britain's easyJet even managed to squeeze in 156 seats, an extra row, into the same plane.

Heard through the grapevine

THE PROPOSED settlement for the Tambunting inheritance feud involves the two eldest siblings, Teresita Tambunting-Liboro and Jose Tambunting, giving up their claims on their late mother's Antipolo house and the family's Antipolo Memorial Park, in favor of sisters Dely Tambunting-Ongsiko and Mila Tambunting-Puyat, brothers Antonio and Jesus, and the heirs of the late brother, Ramon, who incidentally died childless.

The siblings scheduled the signing of the extra-judicial settlement last Saturday at the Manila Polo Club, but somehow Jesus, the former ambassador who heads the Planters Development Bank, failed to appear.

Gov't plans to scrap sovereign guarantees on GOCC papers

By Doris C. Dumlaog

THE GOVERNMENT plans to scrap the automatic guarantees on borrowings enjoyed by some government-owned and -controlled corporations (GOCCs), such as the state-run National Power Corp., in a bid to reduce its burgeoning debts and balance the budget by 2009.

This was one of the measures recommended by the inter-agency Development Budget Coordination Committee to head off a fiscal crisis, which would be soon presented to the Senate and Malacañang.

"To reduce the GOCC deficit, the DBCC proposes to restore the National Power Corp.'s (NPC) financial health by restructuring NPC tariffs," the DBCC said in a statement yesterday.

The DBCC is mandated to recommend to the President the government's expenses for the year and spending limits for economic and social development, national defense and debt service.

"The DBCC hopes that the implementation of these strategies and activities will address the country's budget and fiscal problems," said Margarita Songco, assistant director general of the National Economic and Development Authority.

The committee agreed to flesh out the details of these strategies in the next meeting.

It has yet to identify, for instance, which GOCCs would no longer enjoy sovereign guarantees.

Most of the GOCCs that seek funds here or abroad secure sovereign guarantees to make their debt papers more attractive to investors.

The DBCC also pushed for the passage of tax legislative measures, which include:

- Indexation of sin taxes;
- Two-step increase in the expanded value added tax rate;
- Granting of general amnesty with submission of statement of assets, liabilities and net worth;

- Rationalization of fiscal incentives;
- Adjustment of excise tax on petroleum;
- Imposition of tax on telecommunication companies;

- Optimum performance in revenue collection through grants of special incentives and gross income taxation.

The government is hard-pressed to raise revenues as fears were raised that the country was headed for a fiscal crisis as debts have been growing at a faster clip than revenues.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue, which accounts for 80 percent of tax collections, yesterday said its tax collections for August had exceeded P41 billion and would likely meet the month's target.

Clarifying an earlier report that said the BIR had missed its P43 billion target in August by 31 percent, Deputy BIR Commissioner Kim Henares said that the agency was on track with its collections, based on preliminary figures.

The agency is supposed to increase its revenues by 12 percent this year to reach the full year target.

From January to July this year, however, collections have increased by only 10.33 percent.

To better manage government spending, the DBCC also called for an efficient expenditure management program and the full implementation of devolved functions following the Local Government Code and related laws.

The DBCC also recommended measures to improve the performance of the country's official development assistance (ODA) and expand public capital formation.

"We need to discuss not just the figures, but the approaches and specific activities to support the revenues we are targeting. We should not only say we want to achieve P38 billion to P50 billion earnings in exports, we need to devise ways to achieve that goal," Songco said.

DTI sees rising demand for OFWs in Asean, China

By Ronnel W. Domingo

THE DEPARTMENT of Trade and Industry has urged professional service providers to take advantage of rising demand for skilled Filipino workers in the region, particularly in China.

Trade Undersecretary Thomas G. Aquino said there were opportunities to send out more professionals and skilled workers as Filipinos were highly qualified for jobs in Southeast Asia.

Aquino added that the country had a commitment with the Association of Southeast Asian Nations to send out experts in environmental planning and interior design services.

The official said most land-based overseas Filipino workers deployed within Asean were working in Singapore.

"Myanmar (Burma), Laos and Cambodia are also good areas for Philippine service providers," he added.

Another promising field for professional services was the vast Chinese market, from where the country had received requests for experts in communication, construction, engineering, education, distribution, environment, finance, health, tourism, travel and transport.

Aquino said local service firms should take advantage of regional agreements that provide opportunities for their businesses.

One such pact is the Asean-China Framework Agreement, which sought to establish a "professional exchange" program.

The planned program would promote the use of Asean professional services with priorities on air travel, tourism and e-Asean sectors.

Asean's commitments under the the framework agreement include services supplied across borders such as international telephone calls; services used by consumers and firms from another country such as tourism; services provided through the setting up of operations in a foreign country; and services rendered by consultants who travel to a foreign client.

SSS collections up 15% in H1

By Christine A. Gaylican

THE STATE-OWNED pension fund Social Security System (SSS) might have headed off its own financial crisis.

SSS president and CEO Corazon de la Paz said in a briefing that contribution collections from members rose by 15 percent to P21.6 billion in the first half, exceeding benefit payments for the same period.

De la Paz said it was the first time since 1999 that contributions exceeded payments during the same period, indicating that its financial condition had improved.

"This is a major turnaround and our efforts to intensify collection and streamline our operations are bearing fruit," De la Paz said.

The SSS has fielded more than 300 officers nationwide to intensify collections and help delinquent employers settle their obligations, she added.

Since 1993, the number of SSS retirement pensioners has been increasing at an average rate of 8 percent per year.

As of end 2003, SSS retirees have reached more than 455,000 or about half of the total number of pensioners totaling nearly 1 million, data showed.

This means that the old-age dependency ratio which represents financial support given by paying-members to retiree pensioners has grown to 6.3 percent from 5.4 percent in 2000, contributing to the imbalance between contributions and benefit disbursements.

"At present, only 16 active-paying members are supporting one retiree compared to 19 paying members per retiree back in 2000," SSS vice president or coverage and collection Felipe Cariño reported.

He said SSS needs to intensify coverage and collection to improve its ability to support future benefit payments.

The SSS pensions include disability, retirement, and death with monthly pensions ranging from P1,000 to more than P14,000, at an average of P2,500.

Since 1980, pensions were increased 19 times at an average of 10 percent without corresponding increase in contribution rates.

"We want to make sure that our members get the right benefits whenever they make a claim," De la Paz said.

To increase its coffers, the SSS had invested some P155 billion in the equities market, real estate, government securities, development loans, housing loans and members' loans.

Business leaders call for Asia-Pacific free trade area

BUSINESS leaders from the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation's (Apec) 21 member-economies have asked Apec leaders to consider establishing a Free Trade Area of the Asia-Pacific (FTAAP).

Roberto Romulo, chair of the Apec Business Advisory Council (Abac) Philippines and one of the country's three representatives to Abac, said the grouping hailed the recent progress achieved in the WTO talks in Geneva.

But the advisory group maintains that the multilateral trading system is still of paramount importance and that there is a need to reinvigorate Apec's trade and investment liberalization and facilitation (TILF) agenda.

Proactive

"Unless Apec adopts a much more ambitious and proactive approach to its TILF agenda, it appears unlikely that the 2010 deadline set for developed economies to achieve the Bogor Goals of free and open trade and investment will be met," Romulo said. "This is a major concern to Abac since it goes to the heart of Apec's credibility as a regional economic cooperation forum."

Abac's Free Trade Area of the Asia-Pacific proposal calls for a formal process of eliminating border barriers to trade in goods and services by the Bogor deadlines, instead of the current informal and voluntary process.

Voluntary

Participation in the FTAAP would be voluntary and would not necessarily involve all Apec economies at the beginning. This is contained in a paper prepared under the auspices of Abac's Trade and Investment Liberalization Working Group (TILFWG), to provide an objective analysis of the FTAAP proposal.

The proliferation of bilateral FTAs creates a host of problems, including increase in transaction cost and inconsistency with the Bogor Goal commitments of Apec economies relating to timelines and comprehensiveness. One example cited is the free trade agreement between Australia and the United States which provide for a transition period of 18 years, or way beyond not only of the Bogor deadline of 2010 for developed economies but also of the 2020 deadline for developing economies.

Obstacles

Romulo said the proposed FTAAP has a "lot of upside to it but more work is needed to explore its pros and cons. As the FTAAP proposal goes against the grain of Apec's voluntary and concerted nature, considerable political obstacles have to be overcome for this proposal to advance. The more one aspires for the ideal FTAAP model, the greater the political will required."

Smart buying 40% of Meridian

Telco to complete Piltel acquisition by end-September

By Clarissa S. Batino

Megaworld to develop Taguig property

PROPERTY developer Megaworld Corp. announced that it had acquired the Taguig municipal government's 25-year lease contract to turn a 16-hectare Fort Bonifacio property into an educational center.

Luke Tan, Megaworld investor relations officer, said the company this year would start expanding its McKinley Hill property to include the parcel awarded by the Taguig government. With the additional property, the McKinley Hill project would expand to 50 hectares.

Tan also said the German International School and French International School would be put up on the property.

The properties will be developed as an educational center open to schools offering preschool, primary and college education and will have a sports center, parks and church.

Megaworld has yet to determine the amount it will spend for the project.

In July last year, Megaworld joined forces with food and beverage firm Alliance Global Group for the redevelopment of the 25-hectare Lawton Parkway in Bonifacio Global City, turning it into a mixed use complex called McKinley Hill.

Megaworld earlier said it was setting aside roughly P20 billion in the next four to five years to complete major projects.

The holding company plans to complete a number of high-rise residential developments in Eastwood City in Quezon City by 2008. It aims to finish development of its luxury twin tower Eastwood Excelsior by 2005, residential tower One Orchard Road by 2006, The Grand Eastwood Palazzo in 2007 and Eastwood Parkview by 2008.

Megaworld last week also launched One Central Park in Eastwood, a 38-storey residential structure to be built on top of a four-level mall.

SMART Communications Inc. yesterday signed an agreement to purchase 40 percent of Meridian Telekoms Inc., a broadband player controlled by businessman Victor Villavicencio of the Triple-V group.

Smart, the cash-rich subsidiary of Philippine Long Distance Telephone Co., said it intended to increase its stake in Meridian to 100 percent by the end of next year.

Smart spokesperson Ramon Isberto said the company could not disclose the details of the planned transaction, but said any investment in Meridian would be financed with internal funds.

"We can only disclose the pricing after the transaction is completed," said Isberto. "But any investment would come from internally generated funds. Smart has sufficient cash resources."

By the end of the first half,

Smart reportedly had free cash of P9.8 billion. The company posted a net income of P11.6 billion in the first half.

The country's largest wireless phone company is also set to complete its acquisition of 92 percent of Pilipino Telephone Corp. from PLDT by the end of the month.

Piltel would hold its stockholders meeting today where the increase in authorized capital to P12.8 billion from P3.5 billion would be ratified. The increase in capital would allow Smart to purchase the common shares of Piltel.

"We hope to close the equity sale of Piltel to Smart on or before Sept. 30," said Manuel Pangilinan, PLDT and Smart chair. "As we speak, Piltel is jointly owned by PLDT and Smart, but by the end of the month, Smart would already own 92 percent. This would set the stage for the consolidation of Piltel's accounts with that of Smart."

Pangilinan said the current 50-50 revenue sharing between Piltel and Smart on Talk 'N Text sales would have to be changed in favor of Piltel so it could take advantage of the expiring tax breaks.

As for Meridian, Isberto said the company would enable Smart to offer a wider range of wireless services to its 16.1 million subscribers as of end-June. Established in 1996, Meridian provides wireless broadband and data services to small- and medium-scale businesses nationwide. The company has a legislative franchise and provisional authorities issued by the National Telecommunications Commission.

Meridian is 40 percent owned by Villavicencio, 20 percent each by Jose Baltazar and Micro-D International Inc. and 10 percent each by Jose Vargas and Luis Abiva, according to documents it submitted to the Board of Investments.

WPI hits SSS over P460-M loan claim

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez and Christine A. Gaylan

HOTEL operator Waterfront Philippines Inc. (WPI) will contest the Social Security System's loan payment claim, amounting to more than P460 million.

The WPI board still has to receive a copy of the SSS complaint, Arthur Ponsaran, WPI corporate secretary, said in a disclosure.

The SSS in May this year filed a deficiency claim with the Quezon City Regional Trial Court to collect P460 million, the outstanding balance arising from a P375-million loan granted to WPI in 1999, sources at the pension fund said.

As of end-August, the outstanding balance swelled to approximately P473 million.

The outstanding balance includes the principal amount plus interest and penalties.

Although the loan would mature in Oct. 29 this year, the SSS reportedly declared WPI in default, accusing it of delinquency in loan payments.

Sources added that while the WPI had paid up to P37 million in trickles from 2000 to 2002, it was not enough to fully update its debt which is considered a violation of the loan terms it entered with the SSS.

"Management was instructed to vigorously contest any such claim as it appears that the same has no valid factual and legal basis," WPI's Ponsaran said.

According to SSS sources, WPI has yet to renegotiate its loan payment.

RTC affirms Banco Filipino ruling

THE MAKATI City Regional Trial Court has affirmed its earlier ruling that the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas (BSP) is the successor-in-interest of the defunct Central Bank, and denied the motion for reconsideration of the Central Bank Board of Liquidators contesting the RTC's earlier ruling.

In her July 20 ruling, Judge Rebecca R. Mariano of Makati RTC Branch 136 said that there was no reason to change the order of Jan.

27, and affirmed that the BSP should be held accountable in the P18.8-billion damage claim of Banco Filipino.

The damage claims may exceed P100 billion, considering present values and interest charges and the continuing delay caused by the BSP's legal actions, according to lawyer Francis Rivera, BF executive vice president.

The damage claim serves as reparation and restitution to Banco Filipino, after the Central Bank forced its illegal closure in January 1985. The Supreme Court declared the closure illegal, arbitrary and implemented with grave abuse of discretion.

Banco Filipino reopened in July 1994 and subsequently filed an Amended/Supplemental Complaint of three consolidated cases in the Makati RTC seeking payment of at least P18.8 billion in damages.

Paradigm shift in governance

By Ernesto M. Ordoñez

IN THE Sept. 1 editorial of the Philippine Daily Inquirer, there was a comment on the role of the private sector in addressing the perennial problem of flooding.

"The most fundamental change... requires citizens to put an end to the bad habit of passing the buck to government in order to enjoy the self-defeating satisfaction of complaining about officials," according to the editorial. "If a big part of a problem is indeed the negligence of government in enforcing regulations and laws, who will regulate the regulators?"

The editorial continued: "The only answer is, the electorate. So what does the electorate intend to do about local and national officials who fail to solve problems that crop up year after year?"

Private sector role

We agree with the editorial. A paradigm shift—from relying completely on government to the private sector sharing in good governance—is long overdue, as in flood prevention. The private sector also has a critical role in preventing smuggling. This is especially true during this time of financial crisis, when at least P80 billion in revenue can be generated just by stopping smuggling.

On Aug. 30, Alyansa Agrikultura leaders pledged to donate cash to the government, following the example of the Silliman University alumni. The leaders said that people would be able to contribute more to government coffers if they would work with government in fighting smuggling.

Background

The significant contribution of the private sector in preventing smuggling has already been demonstrated. From Jan. 1 to Mar. 31 2003, the smuggling rate of refrigerated agricultural container vans decreased significantly from 40 percent to less than 1 percent. This was largely due to the Alyansa leaders' recommended changes in policy, such as the "no redemption, no auction" rule, barring suspected smugglers from getting back their smuggled goods. The goods must either be destroyed or given to the poor. Considering that no smuggler has been jailed in the last ten years, the immediate loss of the goods has proven to be an effective smuggling deterrent.

As for regulating the regulators, the farmer leaders would follow the INQUIRER editorial suggesting the use of the electoral process. However, realizing that this exercise only occurs every three or six years, and acknowledging that the people's will may be subverted through electoral fraud, vote buying, and violence, the farmers have decided to do much more. They joined anti-smuggling raids and participated in the inspection of the container vans carrying imported goods. The leaders accomplished this with the help of the Presidential Security Group, which acted as an independent check to the Bureau of Customs and Department of Agriculture inspectors.

Recent events

On Aug. 25, two events occurred. First, the three anti-smuggling bodies that served as effective checks to the Bureau of Customs were abolished. The independent inspection of the container vans was also stopped.

Second, there was a news release that auctions of perishable agricultural goods would be resumed. This would allow the smugglers to once again purchase the goods at below market prices.

On Aug. 27, Customs Commissioner George Jereos reacted by telling the Alyansa leaders that he was misquoted. The correction to this widely circulated report still has to come out. Meanwhile, the smugglers are busy planning more operations, believing that auctions are being allowed again.

At about the same time, it was reported that at least 30 container vans of onions without import permits were released. The BOC showed documents from the Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Plant Industry that initially directed the BOC to hold the shipments. Subsequently, the BPI changed this order.

The Alyansa has asked the agriculture department to investigate this matter. But with the abolition of the Cabinet Oversight Committee on Anti-Smuggling (Cocas), this investigation might never be conducted. Without the anti-smuggling body, erring DA officials who allowed the irregular carrot importation for five months might never be identified.

The smuggling incident severely damaged the livelihood of 80,000 Cordillera farmers.

Response

During the last Cocas meeting on Aug. 25, an Alyansa Agrikultura official said that although the body had been abolished, the private sector representatives of the Cabinet committee would continue the regular Wednesday meetings. He said they would invite the same Cocas government representatives to attend the meetings because it is the taxpayers' right to expect government support in the fight against smuggling.

There is an open letter to President Macapagal-Arroyo requesting the restoration of the three anti-smuggling bodies. The Bureau of Customs simply cannot assume some of the functions of these bodies because the bureau does not have the mandate. Examples cited were the unloading of smuggled goods in private ports and visitatorial activities in wholesale and retail outlets where the smuggled goods were sold.

If the anti-smuggling bodies are not restored, the private sector anti-smuggling group will continue their Wednesday meetings and ask for support from the government agencies concerned. This group will also monitor the agencies' performance and report the findings to their constituencies. This will be done for electoral purposes, as the INQUIRER editorial suggests.

It is time we have a paradigm shift in governance. This shift is being demonstrated by the private sector which has taken the initiative in the effort to curb smuggling. It is hoped that the private sector will be applied in other areas of governance today.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER
NO. 167 s. 2004

SUBJECT : Repeal of Administrative Order No. 5, series of 2001 re: GAMCA Medical Referral Decking System

WHEREAS the Executive Board of Health Ministers Council for Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) States, i.e., Saudi Arabia, Oman, Qatar, Kuwait, UAE and Bahrain decided to establish a centralized medical referral decking system to address the proliferation of fake medical certificates, existence of rebates that grossly affect the integrity of the medical testing done, and the need to protect their constituents from being infected by communicable diseases that may be carried by GCC-bound Overseas Filipino Workers (OFW) The "referral decking system" is said to have currently being practiced in six countries (excluding the Philippines) all over the world;

WHEREAS The Gulf Cooperation Council Accredited Medical Clinics Association (GAMCA) was organized in compliance with a letter dated November 11, 1999 from the Executive Board of Health Ministers Council for GCC, urging the creation of a body which will maintain a central referral office for the medical examinations of Filipino applicants for employment in the GCC States;

WHEREAS the Department of Health (DOH), taking into consideration the objective of the GAMCA referral decking system, precipitately issued Administrative Order No. 5, series of 2001, dated March 8, 2001,

WHEREAS, Administrative Order No. 106, series of 2002, dated April 26, 2002 was subsequently issued by the DOH suspending the implementation of the GAMCA referral decking system, pending receipt of communication of notices to concerned embassies;

WHEREAS despite the issuance of Administrative Order No. 106, series of 2002, there are reports of the implementation of the GAMCA referral decking system. For workers bound for Kuwait, Qatar, and Oman it has been reported that GAMCA member clinics refuse to accept workers bound for these countries for their medical examinations unless they are referred by the GAMCA central office;

WHEREAS, His Excellency Mohammed Amesh Wali, Ambassador, Royal Embassy of Saudi Arabia, has expressed his country's concerns on the integrity of medical examinations, falsified documents vital to the processing of applications by OFWs;

WHEREAS, DOH issued Administrative Order No. 159, series of 2004, dated July 16, 2004, reiterating the continued suspension of the GAMCA referral decking system;

WHEREAS after a series of dialogues with the Department of Foreign Affairs (DFA), Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE), Philippine Overseas Employment Administration (POEA), concerned embassies and parties, AO No. 5, series of 2001, was re-examined and re-evaluated by the DOH, taking into consideration several concerns and issues raised by various parties affected by the said Order;

WHEREAS, after a meticulous and deliberate study, examination, and consultation about the GAMCA referral decking system, the DOH believes that its mandate is to protect and promote the health of the Filipino people by ensuring the rights to safe and quality health service and reliable medical examination results through the stricter regulation of medical clinics and other health facilities, which the referral decking system neither assures nor guarantees;

NOW THEREFORE, for and in consideration of the foregoing, the DOH hereby withdraws, repeals and/or revokes Administrative Order No. 5, series of 2001 concerning the referral decking system. Hence, all other administrative issuances, bureau circulars, and memoranda related to AO No. 5, series of 2001, are hereby withdrawn, repealed and/or revoked accordingly.

This Order shall take effect upon publication in two (2) newspapers of general circulation.

BUSINESS

DTI tightens watch on market scales

By Ronnel W. Domingo

AS RISING cost of raw materials will start reflecting on prices of basic goods this month, the Department of Trade and Industry has stepped up its monitoring and enforcement efforts to ensure that consumers would not be cheated by retailers and vendors using fraudulent weighing scales and other measuring devices.

Also, industrialist Raul Concepcion yesterday said the public would begin feeling the effects of the uptrend in prices that started in the second quarter.

"Prices of agricultural and basic goods have gone up slightly," said Concepcion, head of the private-sector Consumer and Oil Price Watch (COPW). "I believe this is part of the effort to (implement) price increases in small dosages."

The hikes will be felt particularly in processed and manufactured goods, which are dependent on raw materials like steel, aluminum, copper, urea, and plastic-based and oil-based materials.

"Prices of these inputs have gone up at a range of 40 percent to 80 percent compared to levels from a year ago," said the COPW chair. "There is nothing we can do about this. Manufacturers can hold off only so much costs."

Concepcion was referring to efforts of business groups to temper price increases.

He added that prices were going up because of the need for the market to reflect true costs of goods and services.

Data from the Department of Trade and Industry show that, during the past month, prices of most products rose by less than the 10-percent level considered reasonable.

Products whose prices went up beyond the comfort level include a brand of canned sardines from P8 to P9 each; cabbage from P30 to P50 a kilo; and tomatoes from P35 to P40 a kilo.

The DTI reported that the price of tin cans increased from P2.10 to P3.30 due to high price of imported tin plates, which went up from $480 a ton in 2002 to $1,000 a ton this year. Costs of packaging materials also increased by 45 percent for tin plate and 8 percent for cartons.

However, the agency said supply and retail prices of basic needs and prime commodities such as rice, sugar, pork, chicken, instant noodles, detergent and laundry bars, toilet soap and flour have remained stable.

HPI eyes profit of up to P700M

TAGAYTAY property developer Highlands Prime Inc. of the SM Group is expecting to generate revenues of more than P700 million from new projects, HPI president Antonio Henson said.

Henson said it was likely that the company would double its earnings this year from the P44 million generated the previous year.

To date HPI's projects continue to yield high real estate sales. As of June 2004, net revenues reached P231 million. Net income for the first six months meanwhile is pegged at P62 million.

The company will soon launch its low-rise condominium unit at the Tagaytay Midlands called the Horizon. It offers a panoramic view of the Midlands golf course, Mt. Makiling and Taal Lake and volcano. Other projects in the pipeline include an extension of its condominium property called the Woodridge overlooking the Highlands golf course, single-detached homes and a Japanese inspired village, all in Tagaytay Highlands.

Highlands said it recently sold P1 billion worth of condominium units in its Tagaytay Highlands project.

The immediate asset base of HPI consisted of over 502.5 hectares of land and 25 completed residential units and developed lots in inventory.

Cash in on a white gold called coconut

By Tina Arceo-Dumlao

COCONUT farmers are sitting on valuable white gold, the kind that is not worn around the finger.

And Paulo P. Mamangun Jr., president of the Virgin Coconut Oil Producers and Traders Association Philippines Inc., has made it his mission to get as many of these coconut farmers to find the mother lode.

Mamangun tells Business Friday that for an investment of just P120,000, coconut farmers could put up their own community-based cold press and cash in on the escalating demand for virgin coconut oil.

The P120,000 investment covers a grater, two presses and containers for processing the meat from carefully selected matured nuts.

It also includes the basic training for farmers to learn the proper way of extracting oil from coconuts to maintain the "virgin" quality.

Mamangun developed these equipment based on his personal research and experiments conducted since 1983.

Mamangun favors the cold press method as it does not subject the coconut meat to heat, thus, does not alter the health benefits of the oil.

In its natural state, coconut oil is edible and upon further processing, could be processed into cosmetic products.

And also because it is not subjected to heat, the oil does not turn rancid easily.

Mamangun says under the right conditions, the oil could be kept for as long as three years without losing its health and cosmetic benefits. Producers partic-

To win awards, RP ads should use less jingles

By Margie Quimpo-Espino

EVER wondered why the Philippines, a country rich with creative people, has not won a Clio award (Oscars of advertising)?

The head of DDB Asia, one of the largest advertising agency networks in the world, has an interesting theory: Filipinos like jingles in ads. And these are not easy to judge.

"You have a lot of sing-song (jingles) here. It's difficult to win awards with that," says Aaron Lau, who is also DDB's president and CEO of Greater China.

Jingles however are crucial in most ads because the prime source of information of the country is still radio thus agencies need to create campaigns with more sounds than visuals. (Analysts point Mar Roxas and Pia Cayetano won seats in the senate because of their very catchy jingles.)

Some creative directors of advertising agencies raise another point why RP does not win any award—clients always insist on traditional, safe ads, which are usually unexciting and not out of the box.

Lau says if you look at the creativity in Asia, Hong Kong was leading it during the '70s and early '80s. Singapore also did well into the '90s.

But the Philippines, which basically follows the style of the more developed economies is losing out.

Lau says Thailand today is the most creative based on the international awards the country has been getting.

"Thailand is becoming the most creative because they have their own culture and way of doing things," says Lau.

He adds the Philippines lagged behind in the advertising industry compared with its neighbors.

LAU: You have a lot of sing-song.

"Advertising is a derivative of economic and cultural development. Advertising follows the stock market and the overall business situation—if the economy is not doing well, then advertising follows. But there is a lag of three to six months before the industry feels the impact of the economic situation."

A slow economy generally means a lethargic advertising industry. Firms opt for non-traditional promotional activities. This lessens the opportunities to execute creativity in ads.

On the other hand, The World Trade Center tragedy and the Enron debacle prompted advertising agencies worldwide to review cost structures and create leaner businesses.

Agencies looked at their clients' needs more deeply and provide for their needs by a 360 degree discipline. This means integrated marketing—traditional, non-traditional and other means.

Lau notices they have a lot of retail clients (Robinson's, Lhuiller) and he says this requires going into non-traditional forms of advertising like events organizing.

On media outlets, Lau says there is fragmentation. "People are watching less TV now. TV then becomes less efficient."

Lau seems his "job as chief human resource and marketing officer of DDB."

He says he does not look over his people's shoulders and emphasizes the opportunities within the DDB family. When dealing with regional campaigns various creative people are called from different countries to create a pool of talents that will draw up the ads.

At the same time, there are career opportunities within the organization. If there are vacancies in other countries, these are opened to their worldwide network.

DDB's business in the Philippines is 85 percent local and 15 percent regional which Lau says creates opportunities to put in more international business in the Philippines.

"A growing economy attracts the attention of global clients," he says.

Its biggest client in the Philippines is Smart Communications Inc. with a budget of over P1 billion for advertising.

DDB has 206 offices in 96 countries. It was founded on June 1, 1949 by Ned Doyle, Maxwell Dane and William Bernbach as Doyle, Dane and Bernbach. In 1986, it merged with Needham Harper Worldwide to form DDB Needham Worldwide, and in 1999 simplified its name to DDB Worldwide.

PSE hopes ...

like US energy firm Enron, Italian food giant Parmalat and Internet firm World.Com.

"Most buildings were constructed in the previous 7th cycle while those entities that are doing well in the past, due to the correct placement of their main doors and propitious placement or layout of their offices were able to enjoy good Feng Shui and prosperity," Dy wrote.

He said 2004 is the beginning of the eighth cycle and signal a 20-year cycle that favors the youth. It is also a year where most countries hold their national election and start a new mandate.

Further analyzing the PSE's new logo, he said the PSE design looks like a roadmap that starts at the vertical stroke of "P" and has two exit points, one at the top of "S" or the highest point and the other at the end stroke of "e" or still higher than the entry point at "P."

"The Feng Shui interpretation is that if an investor invests or joins the game, he will be able to come out at the high point or eventually come out at a higher position than the entry level. This is different from the currency and derivatives market where more people lost their shirts," Dy wrote.

The logo underscores the PSE's tack to go on a marketing offensive, powered by support from various multilateral institutions.

Arroyo said the PSE plans to conduct a roundtable for investors to further promote the stock market.

The PSE and the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) recently received a P3 million technical assistance grant from the Australian government to strengthen reforms and separately help in market regulation and reform.

The SEC will focus on building the capability of its staff through organizational and management training as well as supporting public seminars for good corporate governance and international accounting standards.

The PSE on the other hand will focus on financial analysis training to enhance the abilities of its listing and disclosure departments. The program will help the listings and disclosure staff understand financial statements and relevant accounting standards affecting listed companies.

Also among PSE's key priorities is to seek clarification of certain provisions under the Securities Regulation Code such as its status as a self-regulatory organization.

Ready to put the past behind it, Arroyo said the PSE should move forward after it was recently hounded by controversies such as the recent resignation of its president and the planned pull-out of Government Service Insurance System (GSIS) of its investment in PSE shares.

Some brokers think the PSE's problem is beyond luck but with a new badge, Feng Shui experts hope that the new logo and leadership will bring in good tidings in the coming years.

Challenging Al Ries (just for the heck of it)

mentation and not a socio-eco segmentation. There's no one-to-one correspondence between price segments and socio-eco segments.

So what really went wrong? Al Ries' surface analysis immediately jumped to the conclusion that Benz failed because it expanded into other car models to make its brand affordable. According to Al Ries, to its consumers, Benz lost its ownership of the word "expensive."

This should be stated as a hypothesis and more accurately worded this way: "To its super-premium segment consumers, Benz lost its ownership of the word 'expensive.'" If research shows, that super-premium consumers continue to buy the Benz $50,000-$80,000 luxury sedans, then the proposition is proven wrong. Also, proof of error can be drawn from data showing that these same consumers are buying the cheaper SUVs and vans.

The correct marketing analysis should go beneath the surface, beneath the apparent. It should look at what could have gone wrong in the segmentation process and asked these questions:

• Were the identification and definition of the different price segments correct in that they were consumer-drawn definitions? In other words, did the premium price segment of SUV buyers define this segment as $25,000? If higher or lower than this level, then the segment definition was wrong, and that's one source of the failure.

• Did the segment profiling identify the true consumer car value priorities of the segment and this segment consumers' perceived point of difference among competing brands in the segment? If this was missed, then here's a second source of the brand expansion failure.

• Was the chosen brand positioning in each of the new target segment crafted and communicated correctly? If not, then this is the third source of the failure.

In other words, success will come when you're correct in all these three dimensions of successful brand extension. And not just in the Al Ries one-dimensional concept of successful brand extension.

We can do a similar analysis in the case of Volkswagen. Its strategy for growing its business went in the reverse direction: from being and owning the "cheap" car buying segment and word to expanding to the higher level price segments.

Surface or substantive analysis?

So here is the issue. What do we believe and act on—surface or substantive analysis? In the two cases of Benz and Volkswagen, to get to the whole truth, do substantive, beneath-the-surface analysis. Put what's immediately apparent to you in a total perspective and context. In these 2 cases, that context is the S-T-P segmentation process.

We've been asked in our "Marketing Success Seminar" if there are counter examples to Al Ries' When arguing on the basis of cases, the other correct critical way to challenge a half-truth marketing insight is to present just as persuasive counter examples or cases.

Consider the case of J & J. This brand has successfully grown its business by extending to many other product categories aside from talcum baby powder. It has leading market share and is earning enviable profitability in the segments of baby lotion, toilet baby soap, baby shampoo, and so on.

One of the reasons for its brand extension success is its product focus and ownership of the word, "baby products." In all these successful extensions, it never left its product focus on the BABY market segment. In this sense, it did not only own a word, it also succeeded in owning a market segment. Also, it was clearly not into price segmentation; it was into market need segmentation. (The junior MRx raised the J&J case to Al Ries and well, Ries, got irritated. "Why do people ask me questions as if to convince me that I'm wrong?")

The J & J case

The other, and more important reason, for its success is that every time it thought of brand extension, it did beneath-the-surface, substantive analysis and research of the new candidate segment. It has been asked, for example, "why, if J&J owns the baby segment, why is it that it did not go into the categories of baby milk or baby medication?" According to Fred Rodriguez, J & J's former CEO and supreme turn-around master, research into these categories or segments indicated that J & J products were seen by mothers in the baby segment as for the baby's external needs and use, not for internal ingestion. So it was substantive, beneath-the-surface analysis that showed and qualified the word and segment ownership of the brand. It owns not the generic word "baby products" but the specific word "baby products for external use."

But as you can now appreciate, it's still all about the most basic concept in marketing that has to do with market segmentation and the segmentation-based brand positioning definition. Remember S-T-P as the segmentation process in 3 steps: 1st step of the process is segmenting (partitioning the total market into segments and then profiling each of the segments in terms of its market attractiveness); then 2nd step of targeting the most market attractive segment as your PTM (primary target market) segment; and 3rd and final step of positioning, that is, focusing on the PTM segment's priority product value where your brand has its distinctive point of difference.

Here then the simple MRx for your responding to the Al Ries diagnosis and MRx. For the S.O.S.A. issue, go for the substantive, beneath-the-surface analysis of the MRx. Challenge the surface, superficial analysis no matter how provocatively and persuasively it is presented. And this challenge consists in doing substantive analysis of the base segmentation process of the presented MRx.

10 Outstanding Teachers for 2004

Elementary

Devotion to music brought her to the world

LINA Jala, who teaches music to pupils at the Triple Union Elementary School in Camaya-an, Loboc, Bohol, hails from a music-loving family.

Her first initiation to music was from her mother, who taught her "do re mi." Her husband composed songs, and mainly because of the influences of the elders, her six children are all musically inclined. They all know how to play musical instruments—either the piano or guitar.

What made her win this year's outstanding teacher award is her involvement with the Loboc Children's Choir. She's the trainer and pianist of the world-famous chorale group.

In September last year, the Loboc Children's Choir brought honor and pride to the Filipino people when it bagged the two top awards in the International Choir Competition in Barcelona, Spain. The choir garnered a rating of 97.5 points, which enabled it to win the grand prize in the children's category. The choir also won the "Gold Cup Award" in the "Europe and Its Songs" international competition for having achieved the highest mark among all the 12 international participants. Easily put, the Loboc Children's Choir was the competition's over-all winner.

For 23 years, out of her 36 years of service as a music teacher, Lina has been serving the children's choir. Everyday, she devotes two hours of her time in the afternoon teaching and training her pupils. It was during her watch also that the choir won three times in the National Music Competition for Young Artists (Namcy)—in 1993, 1995 and 2001.

Lina's love and devotion to music and her exploits with the children's choir has brought her to various countries around the world. They have been to the United States, China, Hong Kong, the Netherlands, Belgium, France, Spain, Austria, Italy, Hungary, Czech Republic, Switzerland and Germany. She and her pupils are still looking forward to travel and to represent the country in future choral competitions abroad.

Humbling moments as a teacher

ONE of the most humbling moments as a teacher for Meilrose Peralta was when she was starting out and was assigned to Bagontapay High School (now Mariano Untal Memorial High School) in M'lan, Cotabato.

She recalls how difficult it was to travel to her school and back to her hometown in Kidapawan City 30 km away. Transportation in the province, she admits, was a big problem then. In order to get to Bagontapay, she and her companions had to ride whatever kind of vehicle was available. And in all those years, they rode either the panel, fire truck, police car, ten-wheeler truck and ambulance just to get to their destination.

Meilrose now teaches English to pupils at the Kidapawan City Pilot Elementary School. She no longer has to worry about going to and from school. She and her husband have decided to settle for good in Kidapawan City, her hometown.

She comes from a family of teachers. Her parents are teachers, her aunts and uncles are also teachers. She says that it was mainly their influence which made her decide to choose teaching as her lifetime career.

Meilrose believes that teaching entails a lot of sacrifice. She says that a teacher should be larger than her profession and bigger than her vocation. In teaching, she says, service is more valued than personal gain and one should always go the extra mile.

She says that her award as an outstanding teacher is definitely the greatest feat she has achieved in her 14 years as a teacher. It is also very meaningful to her because she made it in so short a time. She's now the youngest Metrobank awardee at 35!

Meilrose was a semifinalist in the 2002 Metrobank outstanding teacher search and was finalist last year. She's the first awardee from her school and is the second from Kidapawan City. She obtained her Bachelor in Secondary Education major in English degree, cum laude, from University of Southern Mindanao in 1989. In 1992, she earned her Master of Professional Studies in Development Education degree also from University of Southern Mindanao.

'No teaching when there's no learning'

FOR Genersol Monton, learning is very important as far as teaching is concerned. She believes that in a classroom, there's no teaching when learning does not occur.

This is the reason she always takes extra efforts to make sure that her students are able to absorb what is being taught to them. And since she is teaching at a very large public high school in the metropolis, this is an everyday battle for her because she always has to contend with the big number of students in her class.

To deal with this, she devised a strategy that utilizes cooperative learning by creating study groups. With her guidance, each group meets regularly to study, do their assignments and discuss difficult lessons they encountered in the classroom. This makes learning easier for her 70 students in the class.

Gene to colleagues and friends, she teaches Biology to students at the Fort Bonifacio High School in Makati City. She started out as a teacher 26 years ago at the Mindanao State University where she finished her Bachelor of Science in Fisheries degree. She pursued her Bachelor of Elementary Education degree at the Bukidnon State College in 1989. In 2001, she finished her Master of Science degree in Biology at the Ateneo de Manila University.

Gene considers her award as a motivation to strive for more so she could be of service to others. She says it is an honor and inspiration to her family, an encouragement for her co-teachers to always strive for excellence, and a great achievement for her community. It is also a fulfillment of her dreams because as a teacher she is able to mold her students to become successful individuals. As a teacher also, she is able to help her school and her community.

Lina believes that teaching is a gift from God and is a mission. "It is a mission because one has to set targets for accomplishments for a certain period without considering the compensation to be achieved. As a missionary, she has to extend everything that she has in order to help improve the quality of life of the people in the community," she relates.

She confesses that she doesn't have formal schooling in music. She considers her talent in teaching the subject a God-given gift. She also regards her award as one of this year's outstanding teachers as "another present from God, a reward to the services rendered to Him."

Lina obtained her degree in elementary education at the Holy Name University in 1967. In 1986, she graduated cum laude at the University of Bohol in Tagbilaran City with a Master of Arts degree in education.

Cool mentor

IF there's one thing that differentiates the class of Mariecon Ramirez from other English classes, it is the fun atmosphere of a class browsing the Internet, putting up a Web magazine, joining Friendster, or sending assignments through e-mail or chat. There are also videos and Powerpoint presentations in LCDs. Cool class, isn't it?

After all, you need to get the attention of students of today, who are bombarded with high-tech distractions and interests from all sides, according to Ramirez.

It helps that Ramirez, 33, belongs to "Generation X", used to the IT environment. Her students belong to "Generation Z", just a decade or two younger. The generation gap doesn't exist much here and there's a great degree of understanding.

Ramirez, who already has 18 units of Doctor of Education at MMSU Laoag City, teaches third year high school students in Ilocos Norte National High School.

Her being an effective English teacher has contributed to the students' high scores in diagnostic tests in English. The school was able to clinch the International Award for Best Web Magazine in a Southeast Asia Internet competition for the Web magazine done by Ramirez' group.

She is an expert coach to students who participate and win in writing and speech competitions. She is the adviser of the school's publication and under her supervision, the student editorial group behind the publication won awards in journalism conferences in the division, regional and national levels.

A "real" teacher according to Ramirez is someone who does not enter the profession because it was just a "handy alternative to an elusive dream or career." She lamented at how the teaching profession became only as a second best choice for many professionals, such as engineers or CPAs, who didn't make it in their respective careers.

"A real teacher carries an intense passion for teaching that does not end when class period ends," she said. "A real teacher is sincerely concerned with her students, not only with their academic development but with their physical, emotional, psychological and moral development. She takes pride in the profession and strives to live up to the good name of this age-old noblest profession."

As to her unique teaching style, Ramirez strongly recommends the use of information technology in teaching. She said IT makes learning more enjoyable and such an advanced and modern facility motivates students to participate actively in classes.

"IT is the language of the modern world and in order to produce competitive students who can survive in this global village, we must show them how to use IT to their advantage."

Poetry in Math

HE CAN write poetry about Math. He can simplify the probability theory down to the number of promotional items one can get out of a milk carton box.

Allan Canonigo, 32, who has been teaching Math for 11 years, can make Math and its abstract theories common and applicable in the everyday lives of his students in the New Ormoc City National High School.

Canonigo's teaching style focuses on making the students realize the "practical" side of Math, its use in the simplest process of day-to-day activities of man.

As chair of the school's Mathematics department, he has organized other Math teachers in his school to break down Math's cold barrier and make the subject interesting to students.

Every Saturday, he and other Math teachers hold extra Math classes for those who are really in need of more coaching and for those who also excel in the field.

"The objective of mentoring is to develop the student's ability to challenge existing mental models and to develop his love of learning and the desire to become a lifelong learner," he said. "The classroom environment should be one of challenge and learning."

He has kept himself abreast with new trends and ideas in teaching that has made him more effective and more competent. He has devoted himself to helping the students by initiating remedial classes during Saturdays," said Ernesto Barquio, the school's principal.

Canonigo got his bachelor's degree with Science in Math as major at the Philippine Normal University in 1992. He earned his Master's at the Ateneo de Manila University in 2000. He received the regional outstanding secondary classroom teacher award in 2000 from the DepEd Regional Office.

He has produced evaluation instruments in Math, lessons plans and training materials and other research materials.

Canonigo's childhood was spent in Ormoc. He grew up in a family of eight siblings. His father passed away when he was four. He worked in a sugarcane plantation to buy a new pair of shoes for school. After he graduated from high school, a college scholarship in Manila came his way.

Asked why he opted to go back to Ormoc to teach there when he could have opted to stay in Manila where opportunities abound, he said he never doubted his decision to go back to the province where "there are really more opportunities." Of course not in the "financial aspect," he said, but in realizing his potentials and the potentials of his students.

He says the teaching profession makes a teacher learn more. "In all teaching and learning, the teacher learns the most. He must have the desire to learn more—not only in his field of specialization, but most of all, learning about the learner and the nature of the subject he is handling."

A quote from his "A Mathematics Poem" reveals his teaching style.

"Mathematics in reality... /is mathematics in its sensibility/ where students think and connect easily/ to what they are experiencing daily."

Setting the best example

NOEL Solis is one of the most sought after and well-loved teachers at the Zamboanga del Norte National High School. And he teaches Biology.

Solis is aware that the subject he is assigned to teach may not look very interesting for some students. So he made an effort to make it fun and appealing. One of the methods he uses is called cooperative learning where he engages his students in the lecture and uses the first 15 minutes of the class for instruction.

According to Solis, who earned his Bachelor of Science in Biology from the Western Mindanao State University, he has been practicing cooperative learning long before it was adapted by other teachers. He also resorted to conducting field trips for the students to understand the lessons better.

Solis is currently taking up his Masters in Educational Management at Silliman University in Dumaguete City.

The 36-year-old Solis is also assigned in training other Science teachers within the Dipolog City Division. He was once a facilitator of the Pa-Probe Program (Philippines-Australia Project in Basic Education).

"What becomes of essence is the quality of lesson taught to students everyday," he said.

His being a teacher is not limited to the four walls of the classroom. Solis believes that being the best example to his students is the most effective way in honing productive citizens of the country.

"An outstanding teacher always considers the welfare of his or her students," said Solis who is on his 14th year in the profession.

He related an incident when one of his students almost gave up school when he found out that his family was on the brink of breaking up. He convinced the boy to go back to school and even went to the extent of paying for the boy's summer classes.

He lives by the Atenean's philosophy of being "a person for others." Solis opens his line of communication to his students in the event that they need someone to talk to.

In all of the help he has extended in the past, he has never asked for anything in return, because he believes that helping should be an unconditional act.

Solis considers the Metrobank Search for the Most Outstanding Teachers as the greatest personal challenge so far since the screening of Brite (Brisbane In-Service Teams) fellows for Australia.

Solis finds fulfillment from his students who appreciate his work and his presence in their lives.

"No other reward is more self-fulfilling than the satisfaction my students have in life because of me," he said.

Reaching out to those who shape our children's future

Having reached this height, we also never fail to reach out to those who, with the noblest of hearts, shape the minds of our future generation. A recognition of the virtues and professionalism of the 20th batch of Outstanding Teachers indeed takes us into another meaningful celebration of a milestone.

The joy in teaching third graders

EVERY year, one would always notice a change or improvement inside Fernando Ma.

Guerrero Elementary School in Pedro Gil, Paco Manila. It's either the school's auditorium underwent renovation, the classrooms' roofs and walls were repainted, the principal's office widened, or the herbal garden transformed into a beautiful mini park.

Thanks to the school's unique program "Brigada Escuela," which Grade 3 teacher Josephine Deligente chairs.

Under the stewardship of Deligente, Brigada Escuela was able to organize the parents, teachers, barangay and other private individuals and enterprises to help in the school's renovation and improvement.

Deligente has been teaching Grade 3 students for 28 years. This does not only indicate her deep love and commitment for her profession, but also her love to teach third graders.

"There's joy in teaching children. They make me feel young and alive with their laughter and jokes," she said.

"I believe that every child is a learner and that God has given him the capacity to learn because of his innate potentials and talents that can be developed and molded to their fullest through the guidance of a teacher. The teacher prepares them for lifelong learning as well as develop desirable values of being makabayan, makatao, makakalikasan at maka-Diyos."

She has produced several instructional materials, prototype lessons plans, evaluative instruments, modules that are now widely being used by teachers and students in the Division of City Schools.

Life is beautiful, and will always be

ANNABELLE Catimbang of Iriga City Division Integrated Special School did not plan on becoming a special education teacher. While growing up, she was fond of people with disabilities and that she would always notice them in crowds.

"God has a way of putting us where we are," she said of her profession that not only became a source of living but also a source of fulfillment as well.

"My work is a mixture of inspiration and creativity, as well as perspiration and perseverance," she said. "I have a strong commitment to widen my special pupil's horizon and to show to them that life is still beautiful and will always be beautiful."

She has been teaching special children in the elementary level for 19 years and her field of expertise is teaching children with hearing impairment and autism.

In her line of work, she gets by with a lot of creativity to get the full attention of her students, who according to her, could actually be the most noisy—because they can't hear the noise they're making.

"Special children need to be provided with multiplicity of instructional materials. If it means I need a carpenter to design a material for one child, I seek for it.

"I need to look at the children's eyes. I pay attention to their wrinkled brows. I have to notice whether they are with me and quickly modify the strategy when I see them struggle and drift off. I drain myself down in their emotions."

One of her students garnered a gold medal in the 1999 World Summer Special Olympic Games in North Carolina.

Catimbang's teaching goes beyond the boundaries of the school where she teaches. She organized and co-founded an NGO the Rise-Up Center for the Differently-Able Persons Inc. a nongovernment organization that provides vocational training and skills for children and adults with disability so that they can live and work in mainstream society.

She is a certified interpreter of the deaf and a member of the Interpreters Team. She uses her skill in helping people with disabilities who cannot express themselves in hearings in court trials.

Aside from teaching second grade special children, she also teaches graduate students taking up special education in a university in Iriga City.

Catimbang considers it as a personal challenge to encourage more teachers to take up special education.

"Because of the demand of special educational services to disabled children are still unserved and unreached, I am deeply challenged to train more workers in dealing or teaching special children," she said.

"We need to train more interpreters to help address the needs of disabled victims in cases without due process; we need to train teachers and parents to interpret for students who intend to enroll in college but could not because of lack of interpreters."

Catimbang has an education degree from University of Saint Anthony in Iriga City and Masters Degree on special education hearing impairment from the same university.

She took an international course for the deaf normal intelligence from the Instituut voor Doven St. M., Netherlands in 1992. She has also attended training on special education abroad, particularly in Germany and Netherlands.

College

Dedication in helping people

"I SEE the hands of God at work here," said Dr. Manuel Dy Jr. of his shifting his undergraduate course to Philosophy and ending up teaching it for 36 years at the Ateneo de Manila University.

In that span of time, Dy, 56, was able to produce several instructional materials, some of which are used in many colleges in the country. His "Philosophy of Man, Selected Readings" has been reprinted many times and came out with a second edition in 2001. It is used in teaching the course Philosophy of the Human Person in several sections at the Ateneo.

Dy almost left Ateneo for another university when as a second year student he thought of transferring because his grades were not enough to maintain his scholarship. But, as he said, God has His plans.

After finding out that there was a new degree program, Philosophy, he immediately seized the opportunity, and as the cliché goes, the rest was history.

"My vineyard is Philosophy, and the grape I specialize in is Chinese Philosophy," wrote Dy in his essay.

A half-Chinese and hailing from Cebu, Dy is very much interested in teaching this course because "it teaches people to live their lives. It has some similarities in the Filipino way of thinking."

Dy, who first took up Bachelor of Arts in Humanities, and then History before deciding to shift to Philosophy, was also instrumental in Roselle Ambubuyog's (the visually impaired valedictorian and consistent honor student) entry to Ateneo. During his term as the director of Admissions he worked for the Ateneo College Entrance Test to be translated into Braille. Ambubuyog graduated summa cum laude several years ago.

Dy exudes a degree of humility and seems not to be affected by the kilometric list of his achievements and the recognition he has received over the years.

The desire to help others is a natural thing for Dy. Four of the six basahan vendors he helped obtain scholarships from Ateneo are living with him on weekdays. He saw them along Sta. Lucia East Mall and felt that they deserved more in their lives.

In the 1986 EDSA Revolution, he was instrumental in distributing food outside Gate 4 of Camp Aguinaldo. In 1972, Dy worked with Fr. Raul Bonoan SJ in organizing Operasyon Tulong, a relief operation for the victims of flood in Central Luzon.

Many of Dy's students are now prominent people in their own right, from arts to government service to the corporate world.

Aside from the fulfillment he gets from teaching, the other thing that keeps Dy going after more than three decades in the profession is his daily Mass.

"My going to Mass and my teaching form a unity," he said. "As the Lord gives Himself to me in Holy Communion, so must I give myself to my students in class and outside of class."

'Rebel' with a cause

HE almost didn't become a doctor because he didn't like memorizing his lessons. He likes to question everything he feels is not right. He prefers creativity to knowledge. And he thinks he does not deserve the Most Outstanding Teacher award.

Dr. Antonio Miguel Dans, 46, is a medical practitioner at the Philippine General Hospital and teaches at the University of the Philippines in Manila.

Dans wants to share the award with his colleagues at the College of Medicine, especially with those involved in Medical Research and General Internal Medicine.

"Teaching is not something you do alone," he said. "We at the college share our common ideas and that's what makes me an effective teacher because I learn a lot from them."

Dans, who obtained his Master of Science in Clinical Epidemiology from the McMaster University in Canada, is currently focusing on promoting General Medicine because he believes that it has more advantages compared to other fields of specialization.

"Everyone is a specialist in this country," he said.

Dans, a member of the Philippine College of Physicians (Scientific Committee) and Philippine Heart Association (Council on Coronary Disease), wants to improve the common perception that if a doctor is a generalist, he or she is an inferior physician.

He knows where he speaks of as he graduated from the UP College of Medicine, Manila, with a degree in Internal Medicine Cardiology in 1983, and was a specialist before studying General Adult Medicine again.

Dans considers himself a "rebel" all his life. Ever since grade school he didn't like memorizing his lessons, "and I refuse to learn what I thought was useless."

Until this day when he is already the instrument of learning for his students, he encourages them to question everything because he feels that this is one of the ways for the field of Medicine to move forward.

It is also in this reasoning that he believes teaching to be a wonderful learning experience.

"By becoming a teacher, you commit to become a student all your life," said Dans, who has been in the profession for 19 years.

One of the philosophies he lives for is from his former mentors, Dr. Dave Sackett, who once said: "Half of what we learn in medical school is trash. . . we just don't know which half."

He combines his profession with his civic duties as he considers PGH as his only practice area. Dans, a devoted organizer, speaker and facilitator of Evidence Based Medicine training at the National University Singapore and Asia Pacific Center, preferred to serve and work at the premiere government hospital to help the less fortunate patients. Since 2000, he has helped raise funds for the PGH's Save-a-Life Project.

"I believe this was the best way to get involved in helping the community," he said.

13th International Exposition on Food Processing, Packaging and Handling Machinery, Equipment and Technology

All about food and more

For four days, the World Trade Center will be transformed into the largest market of food products, machineries, technologies and industries when 448 participants gather in the 13th AsiaFood Expo 2004

Have you taken your breakfast, lunch, dinner, or snacks-in-between? The next time you eat and savor the food, take into consideration the processes, the history, the equipment, the utensils, the businesses and industries that made the delight of eating possible.

AsiaFood Expo 2004 is the 13th International Exposition on food processing, packaging and handling machinery, equipment and technology that will open today until Sept. 4.

The largest one-stop shop for food and beverage is a gathering of 448 participants who will showcase of the most comprehensive and complete products, materials, machineries and technologies on food and beverage.

At the Asia Food Expo, big and small entrepreneurs, or even startups will be able to source materials for upgrade of their businesses. Even employees or OFWs who dream of having their own business will also get ideas on what business to start, according to Josephine Miranda, marketing manager of Trade Information Marketing and Exhibitions, the organizer of Asia Food Expo.

"Not only can people find important products for the food business and business opportunities but also seminars, consultations and advice by technical people—everything about the business of food," said Miranda.

"Asiafood is an important and anticipated event and since we've started holding the event, it has generated more businesses."

An event to look forward to is the first AsiaFood Expo 2004 Culinary Excellence all Chocolate Competition featuring the chocolate cake baking competition, praline competition, and without added sugar truffles competition.

The competition will further promote the quality of products and services of the food and beverage sector by displaying various talents of industry practitioners and showcasing the competitive quality of products that is being used in the competition.

The competition is open to culinary professionals, pastry chefs, bakers, chocolate enthusiasts and dietitians from various hotels, restaurants and baking sectors. The first prize winners of the three competitions will receive a free three-day chocolate course at Callebaut School in Singapore. Callebaut is one of the leading cocoa & chocolate partner worldwide.

Meanwhile, the 1st International Conference on Halal Food and Non-Food Products in the country will coincide with AsiaFood Expo. The conference will have a group pavilion composed of suppliers, distributors and manufacturers of Halal-certified food products in cooperation with the Office on Muslim Affairs (OMA), a government agency directly under the Office of the President of the Philippines.

The Trade Information Marketing and Exhibitions Inc, organizer of AsiaFood Expo forged a Memorandum of Agreement with OMA for its participation in the Halal Pavilion.

The agreement aims to bring into the country the Halal-certified food and beverage products, which the industry needs in order to be more competitive. It also aims to establish a forum for promoting the local industry and gather insights on the industry of the participating countries.

For coffee enthusiasts, Beyond the Cup is an affair to participate in. It is a thorough course on the basics of coffee awareness which will be conducted for the first time in the country by Marco Caudini, founder and director of the coffee academy.

The training discusses the origins of coffee, harvesting, roasting, blending, cupping and Barista training. This effective approach has created the Caffe Mauro Coffee Academy.

The lecture will be a condensed version of the main course which is being offered at the Coffee Academy. The three-hour lecture will discuss coffee origins, roasting and blending practices. It will also provide an overview of the Italian coffee culture, the status and prospects and its influence to the global coffee culture.

Last year's AsiaFood Expo has displayed 24 home-grown companies and 380 foreign groups that sum up to 620 exhibitor companies from 35 countries worldwide.

AFEX was able to gather 27,906 registered local and international trade buyers and visitors and is expecting even more participants this year. Asia Food Expo will be held along with three equally important events: Food & Drinks Asia 2004, the 8th International Exposition on Specialty Foods, Delicatessen, Confectionery, Beverages, Beers, Wines and Spirits; Food Franchising 2004, the 8th International Food Franchising for Business Systems Exposition; and FoodServ Asia 2004, the 4th International Exposition on Foodservice, Catering Systems, Supplies, Equipment and Technology.

Paul Husband helps

IT is one thing to build a mall, and it's another to create an experience in malls.

Paul Husband of Husband Retail Consulting in Hong Kong has built a business helping developers create high-performance shopping centers. Sure, he can hire the right architects to build a mall, but what he brings into retail development is really the shopping experience. Working for Hong Kong luxury property developer Swire and HK Land has armed him with experience in retail real estate and the expertise on things such as air-conditioning vents and consumer spending patterns.

There is a belief in business that success happens to a person who comes to the right place at the right time. In Husband's case, he has the right nationality. He joined advertising agency Dentsu-Young-Rubicam (DYR) in BANGKOK's high-end mall Gaysorn Plaza consulted with Husband, whose retail planning company performs services that range from design themes and layout to marketing and leasing strategies.

Hong Kong from London where he organized special events for a company called Joffins. One of DYR's clients was Swire, which owned the then new Pacific Place development.

"Swire wanted somebody based in their offices and they needed someone with a lot of event management, with emphasis on use of public spaces to create a sense of community," recalls Husband. "But they also needed someone conservative and British who could fit in with the Swire corporate environment so DYR thought, 'Paul Husband, perfect choice!'"

Husband retailing

Moving from DYR to Swire/Pacific Place meant leaving his big ticket clients of three years—American Express, Cathay Pacific and Lane Crawford—with whom he still has excellent relations today. Husband's interest in real estate and retail was to serve him 10 years later when he put up a niche retail consulting business.

"I was involved with Pacific Place before it opened. I knew all the tenants, every store-room, every air-con room... I loved retail and then later [when Swire] acquired Festival Walk [in Kowloon Tong], I was also responsible for that," he says. "That gave me my start in the retail industry and what was such good experience was that Swire was focused on building a destination brand out of Pacific Place. There was close collaboration of retailers and I was at the forefront of that. It allowed me great understanding of the positioning of different brands, their customers and how to build a relationship with so many brands."

In 1998, 10 years after managing Swire developments (and not just retail!), Husband set up Husband Retail Consulting because he saw there were major changes happening at retail not only in mature markets like Hong Kong, but also in emerging markets like China "that hardly had any shopping centers and that were department store-dominated." Developers needed help establishing retail businesses in countries where the MTR railways were making destinations accessible very quickly and conveniently and where competition was going to force developers to "rethink, refurbish and re-tenant."

First client

His first client: Hong Kong Land, developers of the famous and luxurious Central shopping destinations such as Landmark, Prince's Building, Alexandra House and Charter

HONG KONG'S Charter House in the central district (above) and Makati's Greenbelt 3 (below), winner of the 2004 Urban Land Institute Award for Excellence, are among shopping destinations that availed of Husband's retail planning services.

House. This time, Husband came at the right time, pitching his services when HK Land was beginning a major refurbishing project (still ongoing). HK Land generally does large-scale refurbishment every 10-15 years while minor ones are ongoing.

Husband did consulting work for Ayala Land, particularly the high-end Greenbelt development. Winnie M. Nazareth, vice president of marketing, business development and entertainment businesses for Ayala Land's Commercial Centers Group, says of Husband's contributions: "Paul was able to introduce us the principals of popular retailers and restaurants in the US. It is very difficult to get an introduction even if we were the premier developer in the country. The Philippines is not in their priority of expansion plans, but SHANGHAI's Three on the Bund, which houses the luxury brands Giorgio Armani, Emporio Armani and Armani Fiori, is among Husband's credits.

Paul managed to get us a meeting with them and actually invite them to come over to Manila and study the area as well as look at our retail developments."

Greenbelt 3 has won the 2004 Urban Land Institute (ULI) Award for Excellence, and the development is such a popular model that it is being visited by developers around Asia. Uli gives this award for excellence in land use and practice, and criteria go beyond design to include elements like market leadership and innovation, environmental protection and enhancement and financial success.

"Greenbelt is really a cutting-edge example of a lifestyle retail center in terms of food and entertainment and I love its use of the garden space," says Husband.

Nazareth explains Greenbelt's financial and aesthetic performance: "Its success is due to Ayala Land's intimate knowledge of the market, its commitment to deliver innovative and cutting-edge products as well as its close collaboration with its merchants. Proof of its success is not just its financial performance but the way it has changed the behavior of the market."

Benefits to business

Husband has also worked with the Hysan Group for Lee Gardens 1 and 2 in Causeway Bay, Gaysorn Plaza in Bangkok, Park Hyatt and Fortune Plaza in Beijing, Three on the Bund in Shanghai, Japanese retailer FrancFranc, The Venetian in Macao (a joint project with the Venetian in Vegas) and the Armani Group.

Does he have any developments catering to a market less than upper middle class? "I have Kowloon City Plaza, a middle market development near Kai Tak Airport where the most high-end brand is Giordano," Husband says. "There will be Park n Shop and Watson's and a new concept for the whole place for a re-launch next year."

consulting, one cannot say that competition is not tough.

"We have many competitors who do elements of (our business) like tenant mix then they lease the place or they will prepare a media or marketing plan to launch a center, but I am not aware of a company in the region who does exactly what we do, with the experience and a staff for full service," explains Husband. "We do design themes and layout to the planning of the retail mix—which types of retail, specific brands, entertainment—to marketing and leasing strategy and the leasing itself, even launching the center to shoppers."

To keep exposed globally to the "latest and the greatest," Husband travels frequently and affiliates himself with a network of associations in America, Asia, Japan, Australia and Europe, bringing the latest in retail and brands who seek a presence in Asia.

One of the most important areas of the retail business is architecture, but unlike museums or public buildings, Husband does not recommend famous architects for shopping centers or malls.

"Many famous architects are generalists. They don't have that (shopping center) experience. We bring into our team a leading retail architect from the UK or Hong Kong with worldwide specialization and reputation. So that as well is an important part of our service."

"We look for specialized guys who can really create a destination, understand how people shop, how to expose them, how to move them, how to expose stores and the maximum number of stores to a customer, how to create environments that will hold customers for hours. Because as you know the longer you keep a customer the center, they're going to buy, eat and walk out having spent more money than if they stayed for a short time," he says with a grin.

The best places to shop in the world

1 Pacific Place in Admiralty, Hong Kong. This is the most optimum mall for its customer base. It has wonderful public spaces and every significant brand for each price point for its customers. It has luxury goods and casual shops. It has a food court but also restaurants. It is connected to the subway yet also has parking. Most of all, it's easy to understand and navigate around. It's dumbbell-shaped and you can't get lost because you'll always remember how to get around, which is a failing of many centers. At 15 years old, it remains one of the highest-performing shopping centers in Asia.

2 Greenbelt 3 in Makati, Manila. This is a cutting-edge example of a lifestyle retail center in terms of food and entertainment. The Urban Land Institute says, "Unlike the enclosed, air-conditioned shopping centers typical of the Philippines, Greenbelt 3 returns to the public a garden and open-air retail and entertainment destination."

3 The Forum in Las Vegas, Nevada. This is the most successful center in the US per sq ft and that is the most important measure of success.

4 The Grove, Los Angeles, California. Another ULI Design Awardee, the Grove is a beautifully conceived open-air center with stunning public spaces including a lake and iconic shops that blend with the landmark Farmer's Market.

Cult of the chic

WOMEN'S RTW designer Hindy Weber Tantoco applies modern cuts and contemporary details to fabulous fabrics such as tweed, velvet, corduroy, lace, soft jersey knit and twill to reincarnate the luxurious look of Old World Euro elegance.

The highlight of Culte Femme's latest collection is the knitted tweed pieces. These are chic articles of fashion made of stretch knit executed in tweed patterns—perfect for those who want to experiment with the tweed trend but wish to avoid the discomfort or warmth often associated with the classic fabric.

Culte Femme's key pieces include mini skirts, slim pants, motorcycle jackets and draped knit tops with unique details such as metals, snaps and contrast piping—all of which work wonders when mixed together.

The brand has a following that adores the styles of fashions past yet thrives on urbane design and sexy, modern applications. Culte Femme rises above the challenge and invites Manila's babes to indulge in these luxuries and be as chic (and bratty) as can be.

Culte Femme is exclusively available at Rustan's Makati, Shangri-La Plaza and Robinsons Place Malate. Also available in a satellite store in Alabang Town Center until Sept. 18.

LEE showcases a new age of streetwear in its latest collection.

For girls, there are vintage lace pieces that fuse disco-inspired styles of Studio 54. Mini skirts are shorter and washed in barely-there tones, to complement tiny stone-washed tees, mirror ball and star-dust print top stovepipe denims.

Men's fashion is casual with a grungy edge. Hand-painted splatter tees and '80s graphic prints are de rigueur. Shirts with camping and hunting prints are for a man about town, while urban warrior types can go for vintage fit tees, quilted and hooded vests and army jackets with dark jeans.

Dark Denim devotees can choose from a range of washes that includes Vintage Wash, Dark and Dirty, Black and Sand, Dirty Vintage Splatter, Storm Wash, Dirty Paint Splatter and Retro Wash.

The limited edition "Disco Funk" Fashion Line F/W 04 is available at Robinsons Galleria, Glorietta, Robinsons Ermita, Robinsons Metro East, Sta. Lucia East, Festival Mall, Robinsons Dasmariñas and Greenhills.

FASHION MANTRA Accessorize, accessorize!

FALL fashion is all about embellishment and opulence, so it's the perfect time to pile on accessories upon accessories. It's definitely not a season for minimalism (neither is it of the gaudy '80s variety, mind you), as industry insiders have confirmed in their fall fashion updates.

Stylist Jenni Epperson and top fashion model Raya Mananquil specifically mentioned the metallic trend, fashion editor Rorie Carlos espoused the return of vintage-y brooches while designer Rhett Eala pitched the use of bejeweled clutches.

One of the easier, perhaps more affordable ways to create a particular look and adapt to the latest trends is through the use of accessories. It's also a great way to express one's personality. Those who are more demure will probably opt to wear a couple of pearl strands, while the more adventurous will don strands upon strands combined with twinkling brooches.

As always, it's about choosing pieces that suit one's style. So, for those on the lookout for new ways to update their wardrobe, here are some of this coming season's hottest accessories and how to wear them:

Pile on the pearls

Now's the perfect time to wear strands of pearls in various lengths and sizes. Fall is about polished femininity, and one surefire way of achieving this is by piling on some pearl necklaces.

You can wear them as multi-strand chokers or combined with chains à la Chanel. You can even use them as bracelets or belts, especially when combined with chains.

For a more feminine and slightly whimsical take, match them with tweed or silk corsets or vintage brooches. Don them with your cardigans or twin sets, tweedy jackets and even casual tees and jeans.

If you can't afford the real McCoy, which can set you back a couple of hundreds of thousands, go for affordable faux and fun varieties. Check out Mimi Cosmetics at the Power Plant Mall for a good selection of funky, faux strands.

Or go to places like the Greenhills tiangge for lower quality pearls that are good enough to create this particular look.

cardigan. So, start raiding your mother or grandmother's closet for vintage-y finds.

Wear your brooches any which way, as there are no real rules nowadays. You can even wear them with preppy collared polo shirts and ordinary tees. Wear them alone or in sets or as an accent for your chokers and cuffs. You can also pin them on your totes and clutches to create bejeweled bags.

For chic, reasonably priced finds, check out Marion Godart, Mimi Cosmetics, Solea and Color Stone at the Power Plant Mall.

Ribbons and bows

Femininity is best expressed through ribbons galore, so start tying those ladylike bows. Simply buy a couple of yards of satin or grosgrain ribbons and tie them around your usual pieces.

Wear a satin ribbon around your suit jacket or dress shirt to feminize your look. Or instead of wearing a belt, tie a grosgrain ribbon around your khakis and jeans.

Shops like Carolina's have a wide selection of ribbons to choose from. Not sure you can create your own ribbons and bows? Try Mango's grosgrain ribbon belts that come in a variety of fun, feminine hues.

Add a bit of s-punk

Fashion icon Chloe Sevigny is quite the fashion maverick. Instead of blindly following the latest trends, she always manages to create her own unique look. If you feel the urge to follow in her footsteps and rebel from this season's Stepford Wife-like style, simply add a bit of punk into your otherwise ladylike wardrobe.

A choker collar that's just a wee bit reminiscent of the '80s is your perfect bet. Louis Vuitton came out with its own studded, chained version. Or why not throw on a dog collar from any ordinary pet store? Wear it with your feminine, vintage-y clothes to create a bit of irony.

Acting on time

ACTOR Tonneau with Arabic numerals in black dial and burgundy crocodile strap; Actor Rectangular with Roman figures in white dial and saffron crocodile strap CHARRIO'S new line of watches is called Actor. Its very name embodies all the elements that make it a one-of-a-kind timepiece.

Not only does the Actor have unusually large dimensions, whether in the Rectangle or Tonneau version, it is also designed horizontally, a total switch from the conventional vertical watch design.

Its extreme width makes the leather strap a very striking feature of the Actor watch. And as it is easily interchangeable, the strap can give the watch varying personalities, in the same way an actor takes on a different character with every change of costume.

The steel Actor is instantly identifiable with its confident lines and clean edges intersected by two curved lines at 12 and 6 o'clock, which are fastened with four screws. Rectangular or tonneau versions are available in two sizes respectively, XL and L. Diamond case versions are also available.

The silver dial of stamped hour-markers or Roman numerals, and the white dial of modern Arabic numerals, lend themselves particularly well to the generous choice of colored leather straps.

Swiss-made and equipped with ETA movements, Actor watches are protected with a sapphire crystal and are water-resistant up to 30 meters. They come with a two-year Charriol international warranty.

The Charriol Actor line is available at Charriol Stores in Power Plant Mall, Rockwell Center; Greenbelt 4 Mall; and Rustan's Makati, Ayala Center.

Charriol is exclusively distributed by Stores Specialists Inc.

Witty and Winsome bags

Anya Hindmarch uses humor and creativity to create smart totes

WIT, humor and incredible imagination characterize Anya Hindmarch's Fall-Winter line. Print images include animals, baby in a bathtub, friends in funky sunglasses, and romantic old couples.

The main line features an array of styles and materials: the big-buckled Stafford tote in pea green goat, the pillar box red patent Limes, and the petrol pony hair slouchy Embleton.

The infamous "sweetie" bags are back for evening. Maltesers, Cadbury's Dairy Milk and Smarties are among the most popular choices.

The classic Anya Hindmarch Maud and miniature Rhonda bag return in metallic, which complement the rich hues Hindmarch is best known for.

This season's prints for the Blue Label collection include a daschund wearing a pink wooly hat and a romantic 1950s image of couples kissing in a New York diner. The ever popular trolley comes with a print of kitsch elderly lady with a French poodle taking tea.

Anya Hindmarch is the recipient of the Best British Accessories Designer award by the British Fashion Council. From a small business, she now has 27 boutiques worldwide and several concessions in Harvey Nichols, Harrods, Landmark, Seibu and Daimaru, and other stores.

In the Philippines, Anya Hindmarch bags are available at Wish, 6750 Makati Shangri-La Shopping Arcade, Makati City.

Avon's breakthrough launch felt like a daytime pajama party—with perfectly made-up and impeccably dressed women playing with loads of cosmetics

I REMEMBER Avon ever since. One memory that stuck in my mind was I had a friend who comes from a family of four or five kids. It was really the mother that brought the food to their house, let's put it that way. The way she did it was by selling Avon. All these kids went to school. All these kids went to college. It was because of Avon that they could do this," said Salma Hayek, Avon's new spokesperson, in a video presentation at Avon's recent breakthrough launch.

The event, which took place at Red in Shangri-La Makati, served two purposes: to launch the company's new products and to introduce Hayek as the new face of Avon.

No, she wasn't actually there, but it was still a luncheon to remember.

Beautiful women from different publications were perfectly made up and impeccably dressed. I should have felt out of place in my Shopwise-bought shirt and orange Havanianas, but I didn't. The atmosphere was relaxed and welcoming. Strangely, it felt like a daytime pajama party.

A pajama party with really good food.

Guests enjoyed a refreshing meal of gathered greens, blue cheese and cinnamon pecans with red raspberry dressing and crusted Chilean sea bass with garlic toast chips and red bouillabaisse sauce.

As everyone savored the vairhona chocolate cake with vanilla ice cream and red berries, Kit Ti Lian, Avon's marketing director, began the launch with inspiring words.

Miracle lipstick

The people behind Avon know how important it is for women to find good lipstick. Their team worked hard at creating one that possesses all the qualities women look for—wear, moisture, color and shine. The result is Avon Color My Lip Miracle, a lipstick that boasts of day-to-night wear, matchless moisture, unbeatable color and superior shine (see related beauty colby Kinny Salas on E4). This new lipstick, which will be available this month, comes in 10 different shades.

Those of us who attended the launch enjoyed a preview. Pretty girls passed around mirrors, tubes of lipstick from competing brands and Avon Color My Lip Miracle on silver platters so we could compare. That was the tricky part. Allow me to confess that I am almost 24 years old, but I still don't know how to apply lipstick. I thought I could get away with just pretending, but with Kit right beside me, it was impossible. I took a deep breath and went for it. Within minutes, I progressed from looking like a clumsy girl playing with her mom's lipstick to looking as if a clown had planted a big messy kiss on my lips.

IF this mom is "taking days off" these days, it's only because she can now finally afford to.

Even as Linda Francisco's three daughters have long been involved in running her successful salon chain, Piandré, it wasn't until recently when one of them had taken the reins of the chain's creative arm.

In May, fresh from her rigorous 30-week training at the Vidal Sassoon Academy and Schools in London, Francisco's youngest daughter, Drea Zulueta, assumed the creative director post of Piandré. Coincidentally, the young woman also opened her own, by-appointment-only salon in Makati called The Studio Salon.

"My sisters and I were all involved in the business," says the 25-year-old Zulueta, "but none of us were into the creative aspect of it. We were relying on our stylists."

While Zulueta grew up watching salon operations (Piandré started when she was only a year old), her foray into hairstyling was more serendipitous than planned.

As a tag-along of the Piandré creative team on a seminar abroad, she met a brilliant colorist from India, who turned out to be a BS Math graduate. "I thought, I can do this, too," Zulueta, who's a psychology graduate, remembers.

"Skeptical, reluctant, hesitant," Francisco laughingly recalls.

She expressed her desire to take up a course in the prestigious Vidal Sassoon in the United Kingdom—"because it's the best." But her mom thought she only wanted to go to London.

"The tuition was expensive, the cost of living [there] was expensive, so I understood her doubts," says Zulueta. "I was scared, too, because I wasn't artistic, unlike Aina," she says of her older sister, who's a painter. Their eldest, Peachy, "is our boss."

"Drea's a very bright girl," the mom says. "I'm glad I let her go. Now I can sit back."

"She's taking days off now," Zulueta chimes in.

Make no mistake, this is no dilettante at work. "I'm here for good," she assures. "It's a very lucrative career. Of course, not for me because it's a family business," she adds with a chuckle.

First in a long time

At the Vidal Sassoon School's London branch, the diminutive Zulueta was the first Filipina to train in a long time. Her intensive training required her to be in class 9:30 a.m.-5:30 p.m., five days a week for 30 weeks. It was particularly hard for her as she had to learn from scratch. Some of her classmates, aged 16-32, were already pros.

As creative director, Zulueta will determine the style direction of Piandré, and train new staff at The Piandré Salon Academy, where The Studio Salon and the Piandré business offices are located.

The Studio Salon is an intimate, four-barber-seat affair, where Zulueta holds fort with just one assistant, Rona Salomon, who does the hair treatments. The approach is highly personalized.

The salon's walls are painted white, accented only by a display of brightly colored bottles and jars of hair products. One end is a black-and-white montage of mementos from her eight-month stay abroad—her student ID, ticket stubs for the tube, graduation snapshots with classmates and her mom, and holiday photos in Paris, Belgium and Scotland.

At the foyer, there's a two-panel Warholian portrait of Zulueta when she was 7 years old, done by sister Aina. Another portrait, this time of Francisco and her mother, also by Aina, adorns the salon.

The salon offers only haircuts and color, and hair treatments. For now, makeup is the exclusive domain of Piandré makeup artists and Aina, who sometimes does makeup.

"I want her to create her own clientele, and not take away from the client base of our longtime stylists," explains Francisco of her decision to open a separate salon for her daughter. Zulueta charges P1,000 for a haircut (for women; P800 for men), like most creative directors of high-profile salons.

Zulueta jokes her clients at the moment are mostly her mom's friends. There are some who come in with photos of celebrities whose hairstyles they want copied. "What I do is I cover the face [of the celebrity] to make them realize, that it may not work for them... I'm all for individuality."

"I think what's good about her is that she's not afraid to snip off [a large chunk of hair] if she has to," says Francisco. "You really look new when you leave the salon."

Now that's not just the mom, but also the successful salon owner talking.

The Studio Salon by Piandré is at G/F CSJ Building, 105 Aguirre St., Legaspi Village, Makati City. Open Mondays to Thursdays 5 p.m. onward and Fridays to Saturdays 11 a.m.-8 p.m. Call 0921-7000673 or 8130240 local 101 for an appointment.

Facial cleansing just got better

POND'S recently launched The Pond's Face Factor 2: Whitening Facial Spa at Palm Grove in Rockwell Club to educate women on the basics of skin care.

A survey conducted by the Pond's Institute, the company's research and development arm, showed that a big percentage of Filipino women still use hard whitening soap both on their face and body.

"This concept is wrong," said Francis Flores, senior brand manager of Pond's. "The face should be treated differently. It has special needs that are different from the rest of the body. These needs may not be addressed by ordinary papaya or whitening hard soaps that are known to strip the outer layer of the skin."

To answer this need, Pond's is introducing the newest addition to the Pond's White Beauty Product Line, the Skin Whitening Vitamin Facial Wash. It's a product designed to improve skin clarity, tone and texture—without hazardous substances that may damage the skin.

Beauty experts and Pond's users Abbygale Arenas and Patty Betita clarified that Pond's new product doesn't promise a Snow-white complexion as most whitening products do, up to the point of damaging the skin. But it works effectively without the hassle of skin peeling or bleaching.

Besides Vita-Cleansers that gently wash off dirt without stripping the natural moisture of the skin, the facial wash also has Vitamin B3 that whitens the skin from within. It has active, whitening ingredients that permeate deeply into the keratin layer of the skin to control melanin production and inhibit the formation of blotches and freckles caused by excessive sun exposure.

There's also Vitamin E to nourish and moisturize the skin, and double sunshields to protect the skin from the harmful effects of the sun.

Dermatologists also recommend the use of any of the Pond's Skin Whitening Vitamin leave-on products, like the Pond's Skin Whitening Vitamin Cream, the Vitamin Fluid and the Vitamin Pearl Cream for better results.

The Pond's Face Factor 2 activity will visit leading malls and schools nationwide. Guest dermatologists will be available for free one-on-one skin analysis and consultations for those who have skin problems. Skin experts will also provide lectures on the proper way to lighten the skin.

Arenas and Betita will conduct free lectures at the Pond's booths in selected malls. The mall tour features the Whitening Facial Spa Zone, where booth visitors can avail of a deep-cleansing and relaxing facial using the Pond's Cold Cream and the new Pond's Skin Whitening Vitamin Facial Wash.

INQUIRER's Apples Aberin-Sadhwani, former beauty queen Patty Betita, Inquirer's Gem Padilla, Pond's senior brand manager Francis Flores, Pond's assistant brand manager Dorothy Dee, Miss Philippines 2004 winners and beauty expert Abbygale Arenas launch The Pond's Face Factor 2: Whitening Facial Spa PREVIEW'S Pauline Suaco-Juan and Cosmo's Myrza Sison get their first whiff of "Today".

Perfect women's nightout

I realized that I am dangerous when armed with a tube of lipstick.

Kit, who had been watching my struggle, couldn't take it anymore.

"Do you want me to help you?" she asked. I nodded and sighed in relief as I relinquished my weapon to her. I took comfort in her deft and confident strokes. Soon, I was smiling my bright red smile as I settled back to wait for the rest of the launch.

Perfect fragrance

Product no. 2 was more in my league. After all, who has trouble spraying perfume?

"Today" is the first of Avon's trilogy of scents. Avon's trilogy of scents is a journey. It is love, beauty and life in a beautiful bottle.

Host Daphne Oseña, who said she's not big on floral fragrances, found "Today" a pleasant surprise. "I really like this scent," she said to all the women.

I couldn't agree more. It's light, sweet and romantic—the perfect fragrance for a date.

"Today" will be available in November, "Tomorrow," scent No. 2, will be launched in 2005 and "Always," scent No. 3, will hit the market after that.

Women who want to get rid of their wrinkles, crow's feet, laugh lines and frown lines but are terrified of needles and crazy bills will love Avon's third breakthrough product.

Anew Deep Crease Concentrate With Bo-Hylurox promises to make one's face look more youthful, without pain and without taking away one's capabilities to show their emotions. Anew Deep Crease Concentrate is to be applied on target areas twice a day for good results. This product will also be available in November.

Goodie bags were later given out, along with silver bracelets identical to the Tiffany creation Reese Witherspoon wore in "Legally Blonde."

On the surface, the event was about cosmetics and beauty, but with the presentation of survey findings and stressing the importance of inner magnificence, it went beyond superficiality—just like Avon does.

Salma Hayek said, "I did a lot of research on the company. And I really fell in love with this company and feel very, very honored to be a part of it. When they approached me, I saw that it was exactly what I was looking for. I could do a campaign of beauty that is not about how glamorous you are. It's about empowering women."

It was more than just a launch. Those few hours were a celebration of femininity and womanhood.

Now if I could only learn to walk in those high heels.

AVON My Lip Miracle

Beauty breakthroughs pamper lips, check age lines

AROUND this time every year, Avon comes out with a big bash to introduce three breakthrough products. I have had perfect attendance in the last three years because Avon always has my favorite item in a better formula than the last—lipstick, my true passion in life! This year, as expected, it has my favorite lipstick in 10 existing shades.

This particular formula is called My Lip Miracle. This is by far my favorite Avon lipstick formula. It has the strong pigment of matte lipstick. It lasts even longer—a good eight hours without drying my perpetually chapped lips. Its moisture-rich texture plumps up lips and gives them a sexy shine that does not look greasy or cheap.

The colors are very wearable; in fact, six out of the 10 shades suit me, and I am keeping them. They are price-competitive and, dare I say, even better than a lot of prestigious brands that cost double.

Here are the shade names and color descriptions to help you decide which will suit

you: Tiptop taupe (the perfect universal nude), Pinkfabulous (beige pink), InCREDible (dramatic true red without pink, orange, brown or blue tones), Magnifispice (rich rust), Super red (maroon velvet), Brown unbound (Cinnamon Rose), Rosiest (peachy brown), Mauviest (salmon pink), Splenderose (coral) and Berrylicious (fuschia red).

The great news: the line is available this month!

The next two products won't emerge till November 2004, so I regret you will have to wait. Hey, you have 10 great lipstick shades to enjoy in the meantime, so the wait won't be that agonizing.

The second item presented this year was the new Avon fragrance, Today Tomorrow Always, a mix of green cactus, freesia, white pepper, butterfly blossom and cedarwood. The freesia is the most dominant note, and the scent smells heavenly. Combined with the rest of the scents, the new fragrance gives off a slight apricot scent. The perfect way to describe it would be a sweet floral which can be used any time of day, all year round.

I can even imagine this on a high-school girl as her transition fragrance from baby cologne, as well as on a woman in her 40s "doing lunch" with her friends. It may be a light and fresh scent, but it stays on.

Anti-aging miracle

The grand finale product is always a miracle anti-aging concoction from the Anew line. It's understandable that this will be launched November yet, because that is when the weather gets colder and facial lines tend to be more pronounced.

The Anew Deep Crease Concentrate with Bio Hylurox admittedly is the biggest breakthrough of the bunch. Avon's researchers have truly outdone themselves this time. The formula relaxes and fills out expression lines (laugh lines, crow's feet, forehead furrows and the like).

I tried the formula on my nanny and the results were almost instant. She definitely looked younger. Of course, the effect was temporary, but the formula promises great improvement with regular use. This will be a hit for consumers who are afraid of needles, blood and surgery, but want to eliminate facial lines.

The new formula must be applied daily, smoothing up and out until totally absorbed. Only one drop per area is needed. Target areas are the forehead, between the eyebrows, under the eyes, crow's feet and around the mouth and nose.

Prediction: expect a drop in Botox and fillers sales. Certain doctors recommend Botox only on the upper third of the face, but not on the areas around the mouth and cheeks because one would look devoid of expression.

This serum promises the same results without the downside of paralysis, so it can be applied anywhere on the face without the consumer looking like a shocked deer caught in the headlights.

But perhaps the biggest beauty breakthrough this year is that my idol, the gorgeous and sexy Salma Hayek, is the new Avon endorser.

The rise of the cheating lifestyle

SHE may not know it, but some week-ends in the Alabang mall, Sen. Pia Cayetano cuts a refreshing sight. She malls without a bodyguard or an aide to fuss around her. Such unobtrusiveness in this day of celebrityhood is rare.

In contrast, in a nearby country club is another new senator whose presence in the gym is heralded by a coterie of bodyguards hovering around as the solon sculpts his biceps and pecs.

We have nothing against bodyguards; they're there for a reason—to protect our elected officials from harm or sudden death, if not karmic retribution. But to us, bodyguards and the way they are flaunted in this day and age symbolize the pomposity of power that has come to mark the times. They are so much the lifestyle of the moment. And that lifestyle represents just how much our values as a people have warped.

The country is heading toward a fiscal crisis, and all that government men are doing is issuing press releases to avert it. You know it'll take more than economists to fix things. And what needs fixing isn't only the economy or the country's institutions that we've lost to corruption, but more so, the values system we're passing on to the next generation.

And what is this damaged values system or warped lifestyle?

To me, it's everything that's so nouveau. And nouveau is tacky. And tacky is:

- "Wearing" your bodyguards like you do your fashion accessories. You brandish them like the season's embellishments. And since we're talking trappings of newfound power and wealth here, we might as well include the blaring car sirens and security convoy that escort the bigwigs through traffic.

LIFE- STYLED

*Thelma

The irony is, traffic in the metropolis is so bad that such a retinue is rendered useless. Yet its use has become de rigueur. If only government officials and politicians allowed themselves to experience the city traffic as much as all of us do—and there's no reason they shouldn't (our appointments are no less important than theirs)—perhaps they'd genuinely realize the mess the urban infrastructure is in. They should consider it one of their life-altering lessons.

- Brand before integrity, and we mean all kinds of brands, from fashions to jewelry. Given what they see or live with, our kids must be growing up with the mindset that it doesn't matter how you make your pile, just make it so you can snap up all the brands in the mall.

Time was, you thought you needed good education to ensure good living. Today, kids must be thinking, to be rich, you can skip school and go into politics, via show biz. Then the public domain becomes one's private wealth. Clean, honest living is no longer lifestyle-friendly; only a corrupt political career is.

- Hype it, don't work at it. Press releases have supplanted hard work. Our kids may grow up in a society that hardly knows work ethic. It's bad enough that technology and media have conditioned their generation to be so used to instant gratification, it will be a lot worse if they grow up

Great black day for men of the moment

BLACK is back," and it was a sea of people in fashionable black outfits who breezed in at 9:30 p.m., as stipulated, during the Black Seven Party. Greenbelt 2's posh Nuvo Bar was elbow-to-elbow literally with Cosmo Manille's cool, hip partying crowd, who apparently set aside the usual "Filipino time" in deference to Johnnie Walker that served free drinks till midnight.

Last November, Johnnie Walker launched the Black Seven via seven unforgettable theme happenings in the hottest nightspots in the city. And this year, Black Seven has come four months early!

Nuvo's Outdoor tent was draped completely in black fish-net curtain. There was a special lounge setup complete with black pillows. There were black cocktail tables and a special Black Seven Video showing footage from last year's Black Seven Party series, which honored Manille's men of the moment, "individuals who inspire male progress in their chosen fields."

The fun party became a reunion of sorts for last year's honorees, who mixed with hot VIPs, gorgeous models and celebrities. The eye-catchers were not the guests really, but the especially created water-filled cylinders that lay on every table, each with a single black fish swimming around a miniature bottle of Black Label, would you believe? And rising from each "fishbowl" were bamboo rods with little cards that said, "Don't drink like a fish: Johnnie Walker promotes responsible drinking."

Already, a second Black Seven Party of the year will happen at V Bar, where Black Knights will honor: Beaver Lopez of Teak, Jay Server of Capones, Albert Besa of Il Ponticello, Erik Cua of Temple, Mark Villar of Yaku, and naturellement, V's only true king of the nightlife, Louie Ysmael, natch!

There were many good-looking and average men all over the place, and I could easily tell they were bachelors on the prowl. At one table, I noticed this bunch of sad-looking married individuals, who if I recall, were once happy, rich bachelors. Pity, di being so used to cutting corners, and not knowing the value of hard work. If we kept at it, the future generation would hardly know the difference between hype and hard work.

Marketing takes the place of knowledge. It shouldn't be, but that's how things are turning out.
It's not what you know, it's how you're packaged.

Actually the above aren't only tacky, they can be downright depressing the more one realizes that the lifestyle and values system of our kids' generation will be distorted even before they can be developed. Unfortunately, it'll take more than a lifestyle check or a witch-hunt in our government agencies to avert this.

Truth is, we're being reduced into a "cheating lifestyle."

Here and there
At the height of the typhoon last week, we stepped into El Circulo to keep our dinner date with friends but instead, walked into the birthday dinner of Liaa Cojuangco Bautista. Her family and friends, including Tina Ocampo and El Circulo's Malu
Gambao, were around to celebrate Liaa's milestone—a woman truly abloom at 40. Our dates were Cesar Gaupo, Lulu Tan Gan, Tonichi Nocom and Mike de la Rosa.

Cesar was here briefly taking a break from Shanghai Tang in Hong Kong. Lulu had just arrived from London where, aside from visiting her daughter, she took up a short course on fabric manipulation at College of St. Martin's.
Cesar, Lulu, Tonichi and Mike will join the Metro Wear end of this year, along with other designers.

Louis Vuitton manager in Manila Gigi Mabanta is moving on to another fashion retail.

After a successful weddings show, Patis Tesoro is channeling her energy into another exciting venture—her weekend house in Laguna will be a dining place featuring the cuisine of her son-in-law, chef Paul Poblador.

Patis' daughter, Nina, and Nina's husband, Paul, are behind Salud's in Baguio, which is one of the best restos in the country.
Now Paul's cuisine will be more accessible when they open Cusi-

Pitoy Moreno's designs show that the best haute couture can rise to the level of art

IF THE Cultural Center of the Philippines has its way, there will be a National Artist for Fashion Design. And a strong contender for that will be "Asia's Fashion Czar," Jose "Pitoy" Moreno.

Under its president Nes Jardin, CCP is working to elevate fashion to the same level as dance, theater, music and other art forms. And Jardin has made his intention known by helping stage "Ginintuang Moreno," a tribute to the diminutive artist who marks his 50 years as a fashion designer next month.

The tribute, which will be written and directed by Floy Quintos, will be staged on Oct. 26 and 27 at the CCP Main Theater (tel. 8323681), and will have as its beneficiaries the CCP Arts for the People Program, Gawad Kalinga Foundation and Laura Vicuña Foundation.

"That's as far as the stage as a performance venue is concerned," said Jardin at the press conference to preview Moreno's designs. "It's an attempt to veer from the Western concept of limiting recognition to the seven arts. Any subjective and personal expression of the artist can be an art form."

Jardin, a former dancer, stressed the importance of recognizing other art forms that contribute to the country's cultural, social and economic development. Fashion, of course, is one of the country's most viable and most popular art forms, next only perhaps to cinema and broadcasting.

Moreno, arguably the country's most popular Filipino designer abroad, deserves recognition not only because of his dedication to his craft, but also for his efforts to put the country on the fashion map. To date, Moreno has done shows in Paris, London, Madrid, Rome, Vienna, Moscow, New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Washington D.C., Tokyo, Bangkok, Kuala Lumpur and Singapore, among others.

Deserving

"The idea of giving a tribute to Pitoy came after similar tributes were given to Valera and Joe Salazar," added Jardin. "People I've consulted said Pitoy also deserves such an honor for his efforts to bring honor to the country. He deserves it in the same way other senior designers deserve it. Hopefully, this tribute will just be the first."

The tribute will show a 120-piece collection consisting mostly of vintage pieces that he updated or fused with new elements to give them a more current appeal. Others may dismiss the clothes as Moreno's "baul" (chest) collection, but the designer himself said this was his way of appealing to clients to value their clothes like they value other works of art.

"A lot of designers have also done beautiful clothes," said Moreno. "It would be a pity if their owners didn't make an effort to

YOU BORN TODAY: You're very light on your feet. You do many things very well. Not only are you adept at technical, professional skills, you're also very polished socially speaking. On top of this, you're accommodating and patient. However, you are often misunderstood. (But it doesn't bother you.) Wrap up important cycles this year. Time to move on.

Birthdate of: Charles Sheen, actor; Valerie Perrine, actress; Eileen Brennan, actress.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): This is a productive year at work because your financial judgment is good today. Whether you're earning cash or spending it, you're on the ball.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20): You'll be glad if you get some management to get a few moments of solitude today—just for yourself. You need some quiet time to pull your thoughts together.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22): No matter what you do today, you will likely call attention to yourself. Because of this, be aware of your dress, your language and how you treat people.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): The Moon is in your sign today, giving you an advantage over everybody else. Use this as best you can! When the universe gives you a gift, always accept.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22): A conversation with a female friend could turn out to be quite helpful to you. Be open to a sympathetic ear or advice from unlikely sources. Someone wants to help you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22): Try to do something different and out of the ordinary today. Shake up your routine a little. If you want a bit of adventure, you're going to have to go beyond your playpen!

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Attend to red-tape matters connected with estates, inheritances, wills, insurance details, bills, debt, credit, taxes and shared property. It's all rather boring, but it's necessary.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): The Moon is opposite your sign today, which means you have to go more than halfway when dealing with others. Be diplomatic and accommodating. What's to lose?

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): You're ambitious now, because you want to succeed at something particular. Today is a good day to make strides in this area. Tidy up your scene.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19): Flirtations, fun and pleasure come first today. It doesn't mean you can't work or get anything done; it just means your mind is elsewhere.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18): Discussions with a family member, probably a female (mother?), are significant today. You might learn how to better manage your resources. Someone wants to give you something useful or valuable.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20): Your communication skills are strong today. Trust your intuition. If there's something you want to tell someone, do it. It will be the right move.

preserve them."

The show will be divided into 10 segments, including, of course, a focus on the terno and Moreno's elaborate and romantic take on the Filipino wedding. It will also be an occasion for the designer to bask and relive his moments of glory.

In honor of Queen Sofia, for instance, who gave Moreno a warm reception in Spain, he'll show flamenco-like gowns with tight bodices and skirts with lace-trimmed hemlines. Other Iberian-inspired creations include gowns worn with the colorful Manton de Manila.

Princess Margaret herself produced Moreno's show in London sometime in 1980, when black and white gowns were all the rage. For a time, the designer also did the costumes of the Bayanihan dancers in the 1960s. Thus, a Maria Clara portion, complete with flowing skirts and embroidered panuelo, is in order.

Speaking of the Bayanihan dancers, the show will also feature the group and other CCP resident performers such as the Philippine Philharmonic Orchestra, Philippine Madrigal Singers, Philippine Ballet Theater and Ballet Philippines.

Indeed, it will be an interactive event with Moreno's designs sharing the stage with other artistic forms. For once, fashion design, in the hands of a survivor and seasoned master of reinvention, will be given its rightful due.

Cleansers for body and spirit

LUSH'S Bath Melts are among the most luxurious things you can put in your bath.

Molten almond oil and Fair Trade cocoa butter form the heart of the bath oils that moisturize, soothe, soften and plump up the skin, leaving it silky smooth.

Elixir Bath Melt (P295)—Ginger and cardamom stimulate the senses and promote the elimination of toxins. Neroli and ylang-ylang inspire, uplift, relieve depression and relax the mind and body.

Something Wicked This Way Comes (P295)—Made with jasmine essential oil, known as the king of oils, it is reputed to loosen stiff limbs. Jasmine is deeply relaxing, restorative and re-energizing. It is an effective balm and tonic.

You've Been Mangoed (P245)—Mango and avocado butter make this a good moisturizer and emollient for really dry skin. Cleansing lemon oil and lemongrass revive and relieve fatigue. They are good tonics.

In The Nude (P345)—With the delicious scents of lavender, rose absolute and chamomile oil, it calms and relaxes the emotions, helps dispel feelings of anger or resentment. The blend has soothing and healing properties, and is especially good for dry skin.

Meanwhile, Lush Body Butters work 24 hours to keep the skin in tip top condition by preventing water loss and using only 100 percent natural ingredients to moisturize, soften, soothe and smoothen the skin.

The new Body Butter range offers both cleansers and moisturizers for bath or shower.

You Snap the Whip (P395)—An extremely vigorous deep cleanser and skin softener for the shower, powdered charcoal absorbs excess sebum and gently exfoliates. Pumice polishes while coconut oil and macadamia nut oil soften and moisturize. Bergamot oil is healing and antiseptic while cassis refreshes.

Running To The Embassy (P345)—For the bath or shower when feet need to be slightly softened. With the pumice, the moisturizing and emollient Fair Trade cocoa butter and shea butter blend exfoliates, polishes and softens. The foot-friendly blend of peppermint and spearmint boost circulation, relieves itching and cleanses.

Aqua Mirabilis (P225)—A complete shower experience especially for normal/drier skin types, its key ingredient is almond. Sandalwood and rose oil are good skin tonics and help balance sebum production.

The Soft Touch, A Safe Pair of Hands (P495)—A hand massage and manicure in one, it conditions skin, nails and cuticles. Fair Trade cocoa butter, shea butter, organic coconut oil are blended with lanolin, palm kernel oil, wheat germ oil, soya oil, avocado oil and cardamom oil. It helps plump up the skin and prevent moisture loss.

King of Skin (P295)—Lush's first skin conditioner is an extremely rich skin softener and moisturizer that is a 24-hour emollient. It is rich in cocoa butter, fresh organic avocado, coconut butter, jojoba oil and almond oil. The reformulated fragrance of lavender, rose and chamomile balances, heals and soothes.
